

ORIGINAL

FINAL

2 * * * * *

3 THE STATE OF MONTANA,
4 ex. rel. STANLEY C. BURGER,
5
6 Petitioner,
7 8 vs.
9 FORREST H. ANDERSON, as Governor
10 of the State of Montana, 11 12 Respondent.
13 * * * * *

No. 12310

FILED

SEP 18 1972

Thomas J. Kearney
CLERK OF SUPREME COURT OF MONTANA

ADDENDUM TO PETITION FOR REHEARING

11 COMES NOW, the Petitioner, Stanley C. Burger, and as an 12 Addendum to his Petition for Rehearing on file in this Court, 13 sets forth additional matters not previously presented to 14 this Court, which matters are deemed relevant and important 15 for the determination of the extremely important issue be-16 fore this Court.

17 1. THE MAJORITY OPINION IS IN CONFLICT WITH ARTICLE III, 18 SECTION 29, OF THE MONTANA CONSTITUTION AND THE CONTROL-19 LING DECISION IN STATE V. TOOKER, TO WHICH THE ATTENTION 20 OF THIS COURT WAS NOT DIRECTED.

21 The majority opinion has concluded that it was permis-22 sible for the Governor of Montana to declare that the new 23 proposed Constitution was adopted at the election held on 24 June 6, 1972, although the new proposed Constitution did not 25 receive an affirmative vote by a majority of the electors 26 voting at the election. Article III, Section 29, of the 27 Montana Constitution, to which the attention of this Court 28 has not previously been directed, provides:

29 "The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory 30 and prohibitory, unless by express words they are 31 declared to be otherwise."

32 The majority opinion in this case is, by construction, declaring that the specific requirement found in Article XIX,

(69)

1 Section 8, that any proposed revisions, alterations, or amend-2 ments to the Constitution shall not take effect "unless so 3 submitted and approved by a majority of the electors voting 4 at the election" is not mandatory, but that such revisions, 5 alterations, or amendments may become effective "by a major-6 rity of the total number of electors casting valid ballots on 7 the question of approval or rejection of the proposed 1972
8 Montana Constitution." (See Page 14 of majority opinion.)
9 To arrive at its position, the majority relies on what it 10 terms a philosophy of government stated in the Tinkel and 11 Morse cases involving bond issue for county courthouses. But 12 those cases fail to give any consideration to the philosophy 13 expressed in Article III, Section 29, which philosophy has 14 been thoroughly explained in the long line of cases stemming 15 from the earlier decision of State ex. rel. Woods v. Tooker.
16 We may note that the philosophy of government expressed in 17 Tinkel and Morse has not been followed in any subsequent 18 decision by our Courts, whereas the philosophy expressed in 19 Article III, Section 29, and in the Tooker case has been con-20 tinuously followed in many decisions.

21 This action of construing a constitutional provision as 22 being merely directory, as indicated by the majority, and not 23 mandatory, was rejected by the Montana Supreme Court in the 24 case of State ex. rel. Woods v. Tooker, 15 Mont. 8, 37 P. 840, 25 25 L.R.A. 560 (1894). In the Tooker case, the question pre-26 sented was whether a constitutional amendment which had been 27 proposed and voted on by the electors at a general election (1892) 28 was, in fact, approved and made part of the Constitution, 29 under Article XIX, Section 9, of the Montana Constitution.
30 The facts showed that the proposed amendment had only been 31 published by the Secretary of State in the newspapers for 32 two weeks prior to the election, and Section 9 provided for 1 three weeks' publication. The Court held that the provision 2 was ~~was~~ mandatory and not directory, and further held that 3 the amendment was not adopted, nor was it effective. The 4 unanimous opinion, written by Justice DeWitt, stated as 5 follows:

6 'We cannot better introduce this consideration than 7 by quoting from Judge Cooley, whose language we find 8 cited, and his doctrine largely followed, by the 9 courts which have treated the subject of the construc-10 tion of constitutional provisions. Judge Cooley says: 11 'But the courts tread upon very dangerous ground when 12 they venture to apply the rules which distinguish 13 directory and mandatory statutes to the provisions 14 of a constitution. Constitutions do not usually 15 undertake to prescribe mere rules of proceeding, 16 except when such rules are looked upon as essential 17 to the thing to be done; and they must then be 18 regarded in the light of limitations upon the power 19 to be exercised. It is the province of an instrument 20 of this solemn and permanent character to establish 21 those fundamental maxims and fix those unvarying rules 22 by which all departments of the government must at all 23 times shape their conduct; and, if it descends to 24 prescribing mere rules of order in unessential matters, 25 it is lowering the proper dignity of such an instrument, 26 and usurping the proper province of ordinary legisla-27 tion. We are not, therefore, to expect to find in a 28 constitution provisions which the people, in adopting 29 it, have not regarded as of high importance and worthy 30 to be embraced in an instrument which, for a time at 31 least, is to control alike the government and the 32 governed, and to form a standard by which is to be measured the power which can be exercised, as well by the delegate, as by the sovereign people themselves.
If directions are given respecting the times or modes of proceeding in which a power should be exercised, there is at least a strong presumption that the people designed it should be exercised in that time and mode only; and we impute to the people a want of due appreciation of the purpose and proper province of such an instrument when we infer that such directors are given to any other end. Especially when, as has been already said, it is but fair to presume that the people in their constitution have expressed themselves in careful and measured terms, corresponding with the immense importance of the power delegated, and with a view to leave as little as possible to implication.
There are some cases, however, where the doctrine of directory statutes has been applied to constitutional provisions; but they are so plainly at variance with the weight of authority upon the precise points considered, that we feel warranted in saying that the judicial decisions, as they now stand, do not sanction the application.' (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 4th ed., 94, 95.) 'And we concur fully in what was said by Mr. Justice Emmot, in speaking of this very provision, that 'it will be found, upon full consideration, to be difficult to treat any constitutional

1 provision as merely directory, and not imperative.'' 2 (Page 99.)

3 At another place in the same work this distin-4 guished authority on constitutional law says: 'But 5 the will of the people to this end (that is, amending 6 a constitution) can only be expressed in the legiti-7 mate modes by which such a body politic can act, and 8 which must either be prescribed by the constitution 9 whose revision or amendment is sought; or by an act 10 of the legislative department of the state, which 11 alone would be authorized to speak for the people 12 upon this subject, and to point out a mode for the 13 expression of their will in the absence of any provi-14 sion for amendment or revision contained in the con-15 stitution itself.' (§30, Page 39.)

16 In another place in the same work we find the 17 following language: 'The fact is this: that whatever 18 constitutional provision can be looked upon as direc-19 tory merely is very likely to be treated by the 20 legislature as if it was devoid even of moral obli-21 gation, and to be, therefore, habitually disregarded.
22 To say that a provision is directory seems, with many 23 persons, to be equivalent to say that it is not law 24 at all. That this ought not to be so must be conceded; 25 that it is so we have abundant reason and good authority 26 for saying. If, therefore, a constitutional provision 27 is to be enforced at all it must be treated as manda-28 tory. And, if the legislature habitually disregard it, 29 it seems to us that there is all the more urgent neces-30 sity that the courts should enforce it. And it also 31 seems to us that there are few evils which can be 32 inflicted by a strict adherence to the law so great as that which is done by an habitual disregard, by any department of the government, of a plain requirement of the instrument from which it derives its authority, and which ought, therefore, to be scrupulously observed and obeyed.' (§150, Page 183.)"

20 The Court went on to say:

21 "It seems to us that the rule which gives to the 22 courts and other departments of the government a 23 discretionary power to treat a constitutional provi-24 sion as directory, and to obey it or not, at their 25 pleasure, is fraught with great danger to the govern-26 ment. We can conceive of no greater danger to consti-27 tutional government, and to the rights and liberties 28 of the people, than the doctrine which permits a loose, 29 latitudinous, discretionary construction of the organic 30 law. 'We are taught by the constitution itself that those 31 who administer this government are divided into three 32 co-ordinate departments; each of these can only act within its own limited sphere, and they, respectively, are the servants of the sovereign power, the people.
There is no power above the people. There is no discretionary power granted in the constitution for either of these departments, nor for all of them united, to exercise a discretionary expansion and flexible power against its rigid limitations, even though such limitations were imposed by improvident jealousy. If abuse exists by reason of defects in the constitution, present or prospective, the true source of authority, the people, have the power, and doubtless the wisdom and 1 patriotism, to correct them; and this, in the American 2 idea, is the safe and only depository.' (Potter's 3 Dwarrris on Statutes, 665.) . . .

4 Upon the weight of authority, and, to our minds, upon 5 the soundest of reasons, we conclude that the provi-6 sion of the constitution under consideration, and all 7 other provisions of our constitution, are mandatory, 8 and can in no case be regarded as directory merely, to 9 be obeyed or not, within the discretion of either or 10 all of the departments united of the government.' 11 (Hunt v. State, 22 Tex. App. 399, 400. See also, 12 Opinion of the Justices, 6 Cush. 573.)"

13 The Court then concluded that the proposed amendment was 14 null and void, setting forth the reasoning as follows:

15 "In considering the provisions of our own constitution, 16 and in the light of the decisions, we are clearly of 17 the opinion that the requirement to publish notices of 18 a proposed amendment for three months is not only man-19 datory, but that it is an essential provision, and that 20 it must be obeyed. We may add further that it seems 21 to us to be a prudent and expedient provision. This 22 requirement of the constitution provides a method for 23 amending that instrument. It is also provided that 24 the constitution may be amended, or a new one compiled, 25 by a convention. (Const., art. XIX, §8.) This method, 26 of course, is not now under consideration. But it may 27 be said with us as it was said in Pennsylvania: There 28 are only three methods by which a constitution may be 29 changed: 1. The method by amendment, as provided by 30 article XIX, section 9; 2. By convention, as provided 31 by article XIX, section 8; and 3. By revolution.
32 (Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. St. 39; 15 Am. Rep. 563.) The first method was attempted. But that method was not followed as prescribed. Instead, another method was followed; that is, a method identical with that provided in article XIX, section 9, except that the advertisement was for two weeks only, and not for three months. As remarked in California, the constitution framers ordain and declare that no other form or mode or machinery is permissible to secure certainty in doing the act permitted. It is also held in the Alabama case above cited that an amendment cannot be made by a method other than that provided. We therefore have this situation: The method for amendment is provided by the solemnity of the constitutional enactment, and another method of amendment has been attempted to be invoked. We can see no other result but that such attempt is nugatory, and of absolutely no avail."

33 The Court then noted:

34 "If it is held that the command to the secretary of 35 state to publish a proposed amendment for a certain 36 period is nonessential, and may be disregarded, why 37 may not the legislative department of the government 38 follow the same practice, and disregard the require-39 ment that the proposed amendment shall be voted for 40 by two-thirds of the members elected to each house,

1 or the requirement that the proposed amendment, with 2 the ayes and noes of each house, shall be entered in 3 full on their respective journals? If one require-4 ment is nonessential, why is not another? And who is 5 to say what is essential and what is not? And by what 6 rules are such distinctions to be made? The constitution 7 does not itself make them. The framers of that instru-8 ment made no distinction in the requirements. They 9 made them all mandatory; and, if a court commences to 10 nullify their commands by construction, we do not know 11 where the court would commence, or where it would end, 12 or where it would draw the line which the constitution 13 says shall not be drawn."

14 The Court finally concluded:

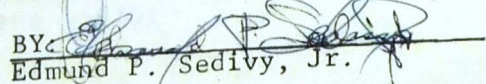

15 "We have felt wholly satisfied that the omission to 16 publish the proposed amendment, as required by the 17 constitution, is fatal to its adoption; but we have 18 considered the question at perhaps some length, and 19 have quoted from the authorities with much liberality, 20 because this is the first time that such a question of 21 construction has been before us. We cannot but be of 22 opinion, with Judge Cooley, that we would be treading 23 upon extremely dangerous ground were we to hold that a 24 solemn constitutional provision was simply directory 25 and nonessential when we face the express mandatory 26 language of the provision, and also the additional 27 and separate command of the constitution that the 28 provision is mandatory. The command of the constitu-29 tion is in no uncertain voice. We cannot misunder-30 stand it. We cannot do other than render to it the 31 obedience which our duty demands. It provides that 32 an amendment may be adopted by certain methods.
These methods were not employed. Another method was resorted to. That method accomplished nothing. The amendment was not adopted."

20 The rules set forth in the Tooker case have been repeat-21 edly followed: Palmer v. City of Helena, 19 Mont. 61 at 68, 22 47 P. 209 (on municipal bond issue); Durfee v. Harper, 22 23 Mont. 354 at 363, 56 P. 582 (on calling in of District Judges 24 where amendment to the Constitution was not in journals of 25 legislative assembly); In re Weston, 28 Mont. 207 at 211, 26 72 P. 512 (on extending jurisdiction of District Judges); 27 Tipton v. Mitchell, 97 Mont. 429, 35 P. 2d 110 at 113 28 Syllabi 1 and 2 (on requirement to publish amendment in 29 house journal); State v. Regan, 113 Mont. 343, 126 P. 2d 823 30 (on the question of validity of initiative act regarding 31 qualification of Sheriff; the Court stating at Page 826 of 32 the Pacific citation under Syllabus 30: "Since the provisions

1 of the Constitution are conclusive upon the legislative 2 power, the people under their reserved initiative power are 3 no less subject to it than is the legislature', and citing 4 State ex. rel. Evans v. Stewart, 53 Mont. 18, 161 P. 309
5 Syllabus 15, and State ex. rel. Woods v. Tooker, Vaughn & 6 Ragsdale Co. v. State Board, 109 Mont. 52, 96 P. 2d 420 at 424
7 Syllabi 18 to 20 (involving license fees on chain stores 8 which this Court misuses in its majority opinion at Page 9); 9 State v. Bottomly, 148 P. 2d 545, 116 Mont. 96 (the particu-10 lar value of this case is the preservation of the dissenting 11 opinion of the Brief of District Court Judge Leiper); State 12 v. Murray, 354 P. 2d 552 at 556 to 558 Syllabi 4 and 5, 137 13 Mont. 568 (concerning the problems of publication of proposed 14 amendment to the Constitution). With this lengthy precedence, 15 our current Court will surely wish to reconsider the conclu-16 sion of the majority opinion which allows for the passage of 17 the proposed Constitution without compliance with the mandate 18 of the Constitution that such revisions, alterations, or amend-19 ments to the Constitution can be adopted only with the approval 20 of "a majority of the electors voting at the election". The 21 provision of Article XIX, Section 8, of the Montana Constitu-22 tion was not merely directory, but it was mandatory, and this 23 Court has no power or discretion under the Montana Constitution 24 to change the requirement. As indicated in the Tooker case, 25 only the people have the power to change the voting require-26 ment. By the opinion of the current majority of this Court, 27 the will of the people of Montana, as provided in Section 8, 28 of Article XIX of the 1889 Constitution, has been circumvented.

29 Respectfully submitted,
30 MORROW, NASH & SEDIVY, P.C.
31 BY:
32 James H. Morrow, Jr.

BY:
Edmund P. Sedivy, Jr.

Attorneys for Petitioner
Stanley C. Burger
208 East Main Street
Bozeman, Montana 59715