TRÁNS-CEND-ENT-AL, a. Literally, passing beyond; transcending; that cannot be expressed by a finite number of terms with determinate indices; that transcends, or goes beyond the limits of actual experience, but not of human knowledge; hence, going back to the foundations of knowledge, as the transcendental philosophy.—Syn. Empirical.—These terms, with the corresponding nouns, transcendentalism and empiricism, are of comparatively recent origin. Empirical, in this connection, refers to knowledge which is gained by the experience of actual phenomena, without reference to the principles or laws to which they are to be referred or by which they are to be explained. Transcendental has reference to those principles which are not derived from experience, and yet are absolutely necessary to make experience possible or useful. Such, in the better sense of the term is the transcendental philosophy, or transcendentalism. Each of these words has also been used in a bad sense. Empiricism, in this case, is applied to that limited view of knowledge which neglects the truths or principles above referred to and trusts to experience alone. Transcendentalism has been applied to the opposite extreme, which in its depreciation of experience, loses sight of the relation which phenomena sustain to principles. Hence, the term has been applied to a kind of investigation, or a use of language which is vague, obscure, fantastic, or extravagant.

TRÁNS-CEND-ENT-AL-ISM, n. The principles of the transcendental philosophy.

TRÁNS-CEND-ENT-AL-IST, n. One who believes in the transcendental philosophy. See Transcendental.

as the usages of society; treatment of others.—SYN. Custom.—Custom is the frequent repetition of the same act either by one or many; usage implies practice which is so fully established as to have decisive authority. Hence we speak of usage (not custom) as the law of language.

USAGE (yü'sance), n. Use or proper employment; interest or money; time given for payment of bills of exchange.

USE (yüce), n. Act of handling or employing; employment; utility; practice; custom; interest.

USE (yüce), v. t. To apply to some valuable service; to consume; to render familiar.—SYN. To employ.—We use a thing when we derive from it some enjoyment or service; we employ it when we turn that service into a particular channel; we use words to express our general meaning; we employ certain technical terms in reference to a given subject.

USEFUL (yüce'), a. Producing or having power to produce good; profitable; serviceable.

USEFUL-LY, ad. With profit or advantage.

USEFUL-NESS, n. Conductiveness to some end, properly to a valuable end; profitableness; utility, which see.

USELESS, a. Having no use; unserviceable; answering no valuable purpose or not the end proposed.—SYN. Fruitless; ineffectual.—We speak of an attempt, &c., as useless when there are in it inherent difficulties which forbid the hope of success; as fruitless when it fails, not from any such difficulties, but from some unexpected hindrance or calamity arising to frustrate it. It is useless to attempt any thing without adequate means; and even when we do possess them, our efforts are often fruitless. Ineffectual nearly resembles fruitless, but implies a failure of a less hopeless character, as, "After several ineffectual efforts, I at last succeeded."

USELESS-LY, ad. Without profit or advantage.

USELESS-NESS, n. Unserviceableness; unfitness for any valuable purpose.

UTIL-I-TARI-AN-ISM, n. The doctrine that utility is the end of life and morals.

UTIL-ITY, n. Production of good; profitableness to some valuable end.—SYN. Usefulness.—Usefulness is Saxon, and utility is Latin; and hence the former is used chiefly of things in the concrete, while the latter is employed more in a general and abstract sense. Thus we speak of the utility of an invention, and the usefulness of the thing invented; of the utility of an institution, and the usefulness of an individual. So "beauty and utility" (not usefulness) are brought into comparison. Still, the words are, in many cases, used interchangeably.

UTMOST, a. Being extreme; greatest; highest; n. the most that can be.

UTOPI-A, n. A term invented by Sir Thomas More, from the Greek utopos, no place, and applied to an imaginary isle which he represents as enjoying the greatest perfection in politics, laws, &c.; hence, a state of ideal perfection.

UX-ORI-OUS-NESS, n. Connubial dotage; foolish fondness for a wife.

V.

V is the twenty-second letter of our Alphabet, and is a labial articulation. It is nearly allied to F, being formed by the same organs of speech; but V is vocal, or flat, and F is aspirate, or sharp. V was formerly confounded with U, and hence the vowel sound of u and the consonant sound of v were both represented by the same character; of which confusion we have still evidence in the form and name W, which, although double v in shape, is yet called double u. The following line illustrates this practice:—

"For every purpose vying reasons fit."

About the beginning of the 16th century, however, they began to be distinguished in printing; but still they may be found indiscriminately distributed in dictionaries. It was not till the beginning of the present century that the practice ceased in schools of teaching the tyro to say vowel u and vow v, as the distinguishing names of u and v. As a numeral, V represents five, either from its resemblance to the out-spread hand, or to the line drawn diagonally through four units in keeping a tally; with a line over it, thus v, it represents 5000. It has but one sound, as in the words vein, vote, village.

VACAN-CY, n. An empty space; a chasm; destitution of an incumbent; leisure.

WIT, n. Formerly, mental ability; knowledge; hence, ingenuity in forming some novel combination of ideas, which produces a ludicrous effect; a person having this power.—SYN. Humour.—Wit (Saxon, witian, to know) formerly meant genius, and now denotes the power of seizing on some thought or occurrence, and, by a sudden turn, presenting it under aspects wholly new and unexpected with a laughable keenness and force. "What I want," said a pompous orator, aiming at his antagonist, "is common sense." "Exactly!" was the whispered reply. The pleasure we find in wit arises from the ingenuity of the turn, the sudden surprise it brings, and the aptness of its application to the case, in the new and ludicrous relations thus flashed upon the view. Humour is a quality more congenial than wit to the British mind. It consists primarily in taking up the peculiarities of a humourist and drawing them out, as Addison did those of Sir Roger de Coverley, so that we enjoy a hearty good-natured laugh at the unconscious development he makes of his whims and oddities. From this original sense the term has been widened to embrace other sources of kindly mirth of the same general character.

X.

X, the twenty-fourth letter of the alphabet, is a double consonant, and may therefore be regarded as a contraction. Its sound is equivalent to hard c or k and s, as in fox; but sometimes to gs, as in example. As no English word begins with such a combination of consonants, so x is only found in the middle or end of four words. X, as a numeral, stands for ten, representing one V placed on the top of another V inverted, with a dash over it, thus X, it stands for ten thousand. It is initial in words that have been borrowed from the Greek, and has there the sound of Z.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

REMARKS.

THE accented syllable of each word is carefully marked, and this to a great extent decides the sound of the vowels.

RULES FOR THE VOWELS.

ACCENTED SYLLABLES.*

1. If the accented syllable ends in a vowel, that vowel has always the long sound; as Cæ'per (like pæ'per), Cæ'rops (like œ'dar), Dî'do (like dî'et), Cœ'ra (like œ'lon), Cœ'res (like dû'ty).
2. If the accented syllable ends in a consonant, its vowel has the short or shu sound; as Cal'vus (like bâl'ance), Del'phi (like sêl'dom), Cin'na (like din'ner), Con'sul (like œcô'ffer), Tur'cus (like mûs'ter).

UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

1. If the unaccented syllable ends in a consonant, its vowel has the regular short or shut sound (as in No. 2, above); as Bal'bus, Ac'o'ria, &c. But s in final es, is pronounced z, as Ar-vo'les (like An'dês).
2. If the unaccented syllable ends in a vowel, the following cases occur:—
A has the Italian sound (as in fa'ther); as Ga-bi'na (gab-bi'nah).
I has its long sound when it ends a final syllable, or precedes an accented syllable; as in I-u'li (pronounced i-û'li). But, in all other cases, i ending an unaccented syllable, is pronounced like e; as Fa-bi-i (pronounced fa-be-i).
Y is pronounced as i would be in the same position.
E and æ are pronounced as e would be in the same position.

RULES FOR THE CONSONANTS.

1. C before a, i, y, æ and æ is pronounced like s; as Cæ'a, Cæ'ero, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cœ'lia, &c. But c before a, o, and u, and also before consonants, has the sound of k; as Ca'to, Co'cles, Cum'me, &c.
2. G before a, o, and u, and also before consonants other than g, has its hard sound (as in gave); as Ga-bi'i, Go'bar, Ba-gun'tum, &c. But G before e, i, y, æ, or another G followed by e, has its soft sound (like j); as Ge'lo, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger.
3. Ch has always the sound of k, as in Chi'os (ki'os), except when it precedes a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, when the ch is silent; as Chtho'ni-a, (Tho'ni-a).
4. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, it, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, change into sh and sh, as in English words; e. g., Phœ'dion (fô'she-on), Ac'cius (âk'she-us). But when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant does not change into sh or sh, but preserves its pure sound; as Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T, in the termination tien, also retains its original sound; as Am-phi'cy-on.
5. S has in general the sharp sound of s as in this. When it has the sound of z, it is marked thus, z.
6. Initial X has the sound of Z; as Xan'the (Zan'the).
7. Initial PH before a mute is silent; as Phthi'a (thi'a). Initial p before s is silent; as Pæ'che (sy'ke). Initial p before t is silent; as Ptol-e-mæ'us (tol-e-mæ'us).
8. Greek words sometimes begin with the uncombinable consonants mw, tm, &c.; as Mne-mœ'y-ne, Tmœ'us, &c. In such cases the first consonant is mute, and the words are to be pronounced as if written Ne-mœ'y-ne, Mœ'us, &c.

N.B.—This vocabulary contains the words in Walker's Key, together with considerable additions from other writers.

* We have carefully abstained, throughout this Vocabulary, from marking the accented syllables, as in the Dictionary, with the longs and shorts [— ˘], as a guide to their sound in English pronunciation, because such a marking would, in numerous instances, have falsified the quantity. The long and short characters, when applied to Greek and Latin words, are universally understood as indicating the quantity not the sound, in those languages. To mark the following words thus, Cæ'per, Cœ'lix, Cœ'ra, Cœ'res, is to represent the first syllable as long in quantity, when it is, in fact, short; and in like manner Bæ'sus, Cal'pe, Cœ'vus, Hân'ni, if thus marked, are held forth as having the penult short, when it is long in every instance. Many hundreds, if not thousands of words, would have their quantity thus falsified, if we applied our English mode of marking to the case of Greek and Latin words. The only safe way is to illustrate the sound in question by a corresponding one in English; but never to employ the long and short characters in connection with Latin and Greek words, except for their legitimate and established uses in prosody.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

REMARKS.

The pronunciation of Scripture Proper Names is governed chiefly by the rules which prevail in Greek and Latin.

ACCENTED SYLLABLES.

When these end in a vowel, that vowel has always its long sound, as in Ca'des, Eso'ra, &c.; when in a consonant, the preceding vowel has the short sound, as in Ea'sa, Co'rban, &c. But ah has the Italian sound, as in Tah'panes, &c.

UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

When these end in a consonant, their vowel has the short sound, as in Ba'bel, E'bel, E'tim, Hia'stus, &c. When they end in a vowel, the following cases occur: a final has a light Italian sound, as in Du'ra; e, i, and y have the sound of e lightly uttered, as in Dil'e-an An'ti-och, Eu'ty-chus. But i, at the end of words, has its long sound, as in It'a-i. O and u have their long sound lightly uttered, as in Gol'go-tha, Josh'u-a; ai (diphthong) has the long sound of a, as in Ado'nai; ia following an accented vowel, has usually the sound of y, as in Isa'iah (Iza'yah). But some in ia have the accent on the i in a separate syllable, as in Shem-a-iah.

CONSONANTS.

C has the sound of s before e, i, and y, as in Ce'phas, Cith'erus, Cyre'ne; of k before a, o, and u, and is marked thus: C s, as in Cain, Co're, Eu'ahan.

CH has always the sound of k, as in Chaldee, Enoch, &c., and, therefore, does not need to have the c marked hard. Rachel has been anglicized, and this forms an exception.

G has its regular hard sound as in go, give, as in Gil'ead, &c. In Bethphage, and one two others, the g has taken the sound of j, by passing through the Greek.

S has its regular sharp sound, as in A'sa, except when marked thus S s, when it has the sound of s, as in Isa'iah (Iza'yah).

N.B.—The pronunciation here given is that of Walker; but in a few instances that of Perry (marked P.), of Fulton and Knight (marked F. & K.), of Trollope (marked T.), of Carr (marked C.), and of Smart (marked S.), is subjoined in notes at the bottom of the page.

* Cai'nan.—P.

† Canaan.—This word has sometimes been pronounced in three syllables, with the accent on the second. But Milton, who has used it six times in Paradise Lost, has made it a dissyllable, with the accent on the first.

* The letter s has commonly the sound of z when it comes (in these circumstances) before a liquid, as in dismal, &c. Smart gives the s in Israelites the sound of s, and Worcester marks both words as pronounced with the sound of s.

THE PRONUNCIATION

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES,

ACCORDING TO THE SYSTEM OF BALDWIN'S "UNIVERSAL PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER."

ELEMENTS OF THE PRONUNCIATION OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTINENTAL EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

VOWELS.

1. In the continental languages of Europe, a never has its long English sound, as in the words fate, name, but usually the Italian sound as in far or father, sometimes approximating its short sound, as in fat.

2. E generally has a sound similar to a in fate, or else to e in met. In French, it is often silent.

3. I usually sounds as in the word marine, i.e. like long e; but it is not unfrequently short, as in pin.

4. O has nearly the same sound as in the English words no, not, and nor, except in Swedish, where it is pronounced like our oo.

5. U is pronounced in most languages like our oo; but in French and Dutch it has a sound intermediate between oo and long e, which can only be learned from an oral instructor.

6. Y is usually pronounced like i, that is, like our e. In Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish, it sounds like the French y; in Dutch it is like our long i.

DIPHTHONGS.

7. Ae in Danish or Norwegian, and eo in Swedish, sound like o.

8. The diphthong ae or ä is generally pronounced nearly like our a in fate or e in met. In Dutch e resembles a in far.

9. Äi and ey are generally sounded like our long i. In French they are similar in sound to our a in fat or ay in day.

10. Au has generally the sound of the English ow, as in now, &c. In French eu and œu are pronounced like long o.

11. Ei and ey are generally proper diphthongs, combining the sounds of a in fate and e in me, being similar to ay in day when this word is pronounced very full. In German they are like our long i; in French nearly like our a in fate.

12. Eu In French has a sound similar to u in our word fur, or like u in tub, but more prolonged; in German, eu and œu sound like oi in English.

13. The diphthong ie is usually pronounced like our ee, or e long.

14. Oe or ö occurs in several of the European languages, and is usually pronounced nearly like the French eu, or e in the English word her. Some idea of this sound might be formed by combining the sounds of short u and e (as in nut, and e in bet) thus üt, and allowing the voice to dwell a little on ä. Göthe might be pronounced güh't-ah; but the u and e should rather form one long syllable than two short ones; the lips, at the same time, being a little protruded, nearly as in the pronunciation of oo.

15. Oi in French is usually sounded like wö, or wä. Sometimes, however, it has the sound of ai, or nearly the sound of a in fate.

16. Ou in French is like our oo; in Dutch and Norwegian like ow, or ou in the English word our.

17. Ue or ü sounds like the French u.

CONSONANTS.

The consonants in the continental languages of Europe are generally similar in sound to the same letters in English. The following exceptions may be mentioned:—

18. B, at the end of a word in German, is pronounced like p; between two vowels in Spanish its sound is somewhat similar to v.

19. C, before e and i in Italian, is pronounced like ch in the English word chill; in the same position in Spanish, it sounds like the Spanish s, or like our th in this (except in the Catalan dialect, where it has the sound of s). In German, c before a, i, and y, is pronounced like the German s, or like ts in English. In Polish it has the same sound, even at the end of a word, thus, Pryp'e is pronounced prip'et's.

20. D, at the end of a word in German and Dutch, is pronounced like t. In Spanish and Danish, between two vowels or at the end of a word it has a sound similar to th in this.

21. In all the European languages g is hard before a, o, and u; in German, Danish, Norwegian, and Polish, it is hard in every situation, though it sometimes has a guttural sound. Before e and i (or y), in French, Portuguese, Spanish, and Swedish, it is like the j of these languages. In the same position in Italian, it sounds like our j or soft g. In Dutch it is always pronounced like h strongly aspirated. G before e and i, in French, Portuguese, and Spanish, sounds like g hard.

22. H, in French, Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese, is either never pronounced at all, or else is sounded so slightly that an English ear can scarcely perceive it. In the other languages of Europe it has the same sound as in English.

23. J, in Italian, German, Polish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and Dutch, is pronounced like our y. In French and Portuguese it has the sound of sh, or s in the English word pleasure. In Spanish it is equivalent to s, being similar in sound to a strongly-aspirated h.

24. M and n, at the end of a syllable in French and Portuguese, often have a nasal sound, similar to our ng. For example, bon in French is pronounced almost bong; alem or alen, in Portuguese, is sounded like á-leng. In pronouncing the nasal m and n in French, care should be taken not to produce the ringing sound of the English termination ng.

25. N in Spanish (like nh in Portuguese and gn in French and Italian) has the sound of ny; Miño and Minho are pronounced alike, meen'yo. (See 34.)

26. O, before e and i in Portuguese and Spanish, and before every vowel in French, has the sound of k.

27. R, in most European languages, is trilled more strongly than in English, particularly at the end of a word or syllable.

28. S, in many European tongues, when between two vowels, is very soft, having almost the sound of our s. In German it is often so pronounced at the beginning of a syllable. In Hungarian it sounds like our sh or the German sch.

29. W, in German and some other languages, is nearly similar to our s.

30. X in Spanish generally sounds like a strongly-aspirated h. (See 23.) In Portuguese it is pronounced like our sh.

31. Z, in German and Swedish, has the sound of ts; in Italian, s usually sounds like ds, ss like ts.

COMBINED CONSONANTS.

32. Ch in Spanish has the same sound as in the English word chill (except in the dialect of Catalonia, where it sounds like k). In Italian it is pronounced like k; in German, Polish, and some other languages, it has a guttural sound somewhat similar to a strongly-aspirated h. In French (except in the case of some words derived from the Greek) and in Portuguese, ch has the sound of our sh.

33. Gh in Italian is like our g hard.

34. Gn, in French and Italian (like ñ in Spanish) combines the sounds of n and y consonant. (See 25.)

35. Lh in Portuguese, and ll in Spanish, sound like our ly: e. g. celho is pronounced vel'yo; villa veel'ya; llano, lya'no.

36. Nh in Portuguese is pronounced like the Spanish ñ. (See 25 and 34.)

37. Sz, in Hungarian and German, is sounded like sharp s or ss.

38. Sch in German is pronounced like sh in English; in Dutch, however, sch has a sound similar to our sk.

39. Th, in all the continental European languages except Greek (in which the character θ has the same sound as our th), is pronounced like simple t.

REMARKS.

I, in French and some other languages, often has a sound intermediate between our ee and short i: vill might be pronounced in English vill or seel. O in on nasal should be pronounced like o in no or note, but not so long. In marking the pronunciation of foreign names, we have usually preferred to use á, é (as é) and ò, rather than á è ó as the speaker would be in danger of prolonging the sounds of the latter too much. E (not marked with an accent) in French is usually silent; and it is occasionally so in Danish and German.

In pronouncing French words or names, the accent should be placed nearly equally on all the syllables, but the principal accent should usually fall on the last.

A double letter in foreign words is to be sounded more distinctly and fully than a single letter of the same kind.

EXPLANATION OF THE ABBREVIATIONS AND SIGNS USED TO INDICATE THE PRONUNCIATION, &c.

Arab. Arabic.	Port. Portuguese.
Dan. Danish.	pron. pronunciation.
Flem. Flemish.	Russ. Russian.
Fr. French.	Sp. Spanish.
Ger. German.	Sw. Swedish.
Hun. Hungarian.	syn. synonymous with.

The vowels a, e, i, o, marked with a point underneath, have an obscure sound similar to short u: thus, Merton should be pronounced múr'tún or múr't'ún.

á is employed to denote the long sound of a.

ä is broad, having a sound similar to o in not.

ø has a sound similar to e in her (see 14);* it may be Anglicised by e.

ü is like the French u (see 5),* which it is employed in pronunciation to represent; it may be Anglicised by the English u.

v, small capital, is intended to represent the sound of the French eu (see 12);* it should be pronounced like u in the English word fur.

d, small capital, is intended to represent a sound similar to th in this. (See 20).*

g and k, small capitals, indicate the sound of the German ch, or one similar to it. (See 33).*

h, small capital, has a sound somewhat similar to the preceding, but more resembling a strongly-aspirated h.

l (liquid) is to be pronounced like li in million; it blends the sound of l and y consonant.

m and n, small capitals, and ng, are used to represent the nasal sound in French, being similar in sound to ng. (See 24).*

ñ is pronounced like ni in mission; it blends the sounds of n and y consonant. (See 25 and 34).*

rr, small capital, has the sound of rr in terror. (See 27).*

w (small capital) has a sound similar to our v. y and ey, at the end of an unaccented syllable, sound like y in me.

ai and ey, are considered to be equivalent to a in fate.

au and aw have the sound of a in fall.

ë indicates a sound similar to i in the first syllable of spirit.

öw is to be pronounced like ow in cow or ow in hour.

gh is employed in pronunciation for g hard.

ss is sometimes used to mark the sharp sound of s.

th is to be pronounced like th in this.

* These figures refer to the elements of Pronunciation given above.

ADDITIONAL OBSERVATIONS

PROPER PRONUNCIATION OF FOREIGN NAMES.

1. EVERY letter or combination of letters occurring in the pronunciation of a word or name is to be pronounced with its proper English sound; e. g. ch is to be sounded as in chill, g as in get; &c. From not attending to this simple and obvious rule, many persons fail to pronounce names correctly, even while they have the pronunciation clearly and accurately marked before their eyes. Thus, we have given Che-wá-wá as the pronunciation of Ohéwáhuá; many, however, with this pronunciation before them, have called it shé-wá-wá, not considering that if such had been the true sound, we should have written it with sh. Chapala is in like manner most improperly pronounced shá-pá-lá. All persons desirous of speaking correctly, should carefully guard against this most vicious pronunciation.

In connection with this subject, it may be observed that, in names where the pronunciation is not repeated, ou and ow, if not otherwise marked, are to be sounded as in our and now; a vowel followed by a consonant ending the syllable, if not marked long, is to be pronounced short, &c.

2. In the pronunciation of foreign names, particular care should be taken not to allow i to fall into the third or broad sound of this vowel—an error to which English and American speakers are very prone; it would be far better, generally speaking, to pronounce it like a in fat. It may be observed, however, that a before a nasal in French is usually broad, almost like o in not. We have accordingly represented an nasal by ow or bw.

3. In pronouncing French words containing n nasal, the speaker should be careful not to give o its short sound, since this is not only incorrect, but is liable to confound the word with others entirely different in spelling and signification. By this faulty pronunciation bon (good) is sounded like ban (ban or exile); bon should be pronounced bón—almost bóng. Toujon should either be entirely Anglicized (as too'jun), or else pronounced too'bón—almost too'long. For the same reasons, an in names not Anglicized should have its distinct sound, like our u in far, and not be confounded with the French ou or u. There is no sufficient reason why the French names Druh (druh) and Drooz (droo), Lewre (lur) and Lure (lur), should not be distinguished from each other in pronunciation, as well as our words groom and groom, cure and cure.

4. In the pronunciation of foreign names, the speaker should be careful to pronounce all vowels, whether in an accented or unaccented syllable, distinctly, if they are not expressly marked as obscure.

5. y in the middle of a syllable, or at the end of an accented syllable, is like i; at the end of an unaccented syllable, like e.

6. When h (not small capital) occurs at the end of a syllable in the pronunciation of a name, it is not to be sounded. It is employed to enable the learner more readily to pronounce the preceding vowel short, as druh, &c.

7. h is employed in this Vocabulary to denote a sound intermediate between i and a, but more resembling the latter, as al-a-bah'má, co-lo-rah'do. The speaker should be very careful not to pronounce the penultimate a in these names like that in far or father.

8. An acute accent (') is used to mark the primary accent of a name; a grave (`) to mark the secondary accent: e. g. Pas'sé-má-quod'y.

9. It is to be observed that the number of syllables in the names of this Vocabulary is to be determined by the accents or hyphens: thus, too'lá-bén, the pronunciation of Eisleben, has three syllables, not four, the e in the first syllable (loo) being silent; dnýes'ter, the Russian pronunciation of Imiester, must be pronounced not dní-es'ter but dñes'ter, the y being employed to indicate the sound of the Spanish ñ, in other words, that of ni in rainbow.

10. An Italic letter in the spelling of a name is silent: thus, Jes'samine is to be pronounced as if written Jes'amina.

11. The abbreviation syn. ("synonymous with") indicates that the name to which it is affixed is either simply another spelling of the name referred to, or that it designates the same place.

Different modes are sometimes made use of in order to indicate the same sound: thus, t long followed by s sharp may be represented by iss or ice,—we have, in the pronunciation of Eisleben, preferred using ice, as being simpler for the common reader. In a multitude of cases it obviously makes but little difference whether we select one or another of several modes: Trenton, for example, may be pronounced tren'tun, tren'ton, tren'ten, or tren't'n, the point being to show that the sound of n in the unaccented syllable is very short and indistinct—in fact almost silent.

* * * The reader may observe that, in this part of our work, we have not followed the method of marking the pronunciation adopted in the foregoing part of the Dictionary. The adoption of a different system of notation was necessary, in order, as far as possible, to represent all the variety of sounds in the different European languages; and, as we have freely used the materials of Baldwin's "Universal Pronouncing Gazetteer," so the system of marking the sounds of the letters that we have adopted, is essentially the same as that employed in that important work. It may also be remarked that the second or Italian sound of a (which occurs in the pronunciation of foreign names far more frequently than any other vowel sound) is represented in the Dictionary by á. To this character there cannot be the slightest objection when we wish to mark the sounds of English words only. It is, however, far otherwise with regard to foreign names, in which this very character (á) almost always has the sound of i or e, and never that of a.

APPENDIX.

LIST OF WORDS OF DOUBTFUL OR VARIOUS ORTHOGRAPHY.

The following Vocabulary comprises nearly all the English words with regard to which a diversity of orthography is now often met with.

The orthography in the left-hand column is deemed to be well authorized, and in most cases preferable; but with respect to the authority of that in the right-hand column, there is great diversity. In some cases it is nearly or quite as well authorized as that on the left hand, and in some it has but very feeble support. Both orthographies of some of the words are right, the words being differently spelt when used in different senses; as, draught or draft, subtle or subtil, abetter or abettor, canvass or canvas, caliber or calibre, caster or castor, controller or comptroller, &c.

THE PREPOSITION.

PREPOSITIONS show the relations between words, and are generally placed before nouns and pronouns in the objective case.

There are many nouns, adjectives, verbs, and participles, which are followed by their appropriate prepositions; and there are instances in which it is a matter of some difficulty to determine what preposition is most suitable to be used.

THE ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

AFTER having combined, in this Dictionary, the orthography, orthoepy, and definition of the principal words of the English language, as it exists at the present time, we shall now endeavour to give those who have not access to any of the elaborate works that have been produced on the subject, a brief account of the derivation and progress of that comprehensive and wide-spread tongue.

As the history of the earliest inhabitants of Britain must be deciphered from their stone weapons and implements, the circles of upright stones in which they met for council or religion, and the rude urns in which their ashes were collected and placed beneath the sepulchral cairn, it is not to be expected that we should be certain of their language, nor could such a people be supposed to have a native literature. The Phœnicians, however, traded with them long before the Roman invasion, and the British Islands were known to the ancient Greeks as the Cassiterides or Tin Islands. When Julius Cæsar landed on the shores of Britain, about fifty-five years before the Christian era, he was confronted by a bold and hardy race, who bravely contested every foot of ground that his veteran legions temporarily obtained. It is not the appearance, the manners, or the government of these bold Britons, however, with which we are now concerned; but we eagerly turn to any information we can obtain concerning their language or literature. It is to the commentaries of Cæsar that we are principally indebted for any information we possess on these points.

The earliest inhabitants of Britain appear to have belonged to that great family, whose main branches, known as Celts, spread themselves extensively over middle and western Europe. They were probably identical with the Cimmericians or Cimbri, who, on being expelled from the north of the Euxine found new settlements near the Baltic and the mouth of the Elbe. Pressed forward by the advancing wave of emigration, the Celts crossed from the neighbouring country of Gaul into Britain; and, at a later period, were driven into the inland parts of their own country by an invasion of Belgæ, a branch of the great Teutonic family. Their men of learning were their Druids, or priests, who did not commit their mysteries to writing, but communicated them to their disciples in verses, which they were occupied for many years in committing to memory; but at this early period Cæsar found them using the Greek characters in the record of other matters. During the time that the Romans held an insecure dominion in Britain, the Roman language would be used in administrative and probably in judicial proceedings; those who were of mixed blood, and natives advanced to any civil employment, must have become acquainted with the Roman language and laws; and, as the introduction of Christianity belongs to this period, this implies the more extensive employment of the Greek language, and thus we may perceive how some of those elements were introduced that contributed to the formation of the language of Britain. We shall therefore here present the Lord's Prayer in each of the languages that may have contributed most to the formation of the English:—

LATIN.

From the version made by St. Jerome in the latter part of the fourth century—the “Vulgate”—as edited by Tischendorf in his “Novum Testamentum Triglottum,” Leipzig, 1854.

Pater noster qui es in cœlis, sanctificetur nomen tuum,
adveniat regnum tuum,
fiat voluntas tua sicut in cœlo et in terra,
panem nostrum supersubstantialem da nobis
hodie,
et dimitte nobis debita nostra sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris, et ne inducas nos in temptationem,
sed libera nos a malo.

FRENCH.

From the Geneva version of 1583, as revised by David Martin, original edition, Amsterdam, 1707, fol.

Nôtre Père qui es aux cieux, ton Nom soit sanctifié.
Ton Règne vienne.
Ta volonté soit faite en la terre comme au ciel.
Donne nous aujourd'hui nôtre pain quotidien
Et nous quitte nos dettes, comme nous quittons ainsi les détes à nos débiteurs.
Et ne nous induis point en tentation,
mais délivre nous du Malin.
Car à toi est le regne, & la puissance, & la gloire à jamais, Amen.

GAELIC.

From the version of the New Testament by the Rev. James Stuart, as published by the Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge, Edinburgh, 1813, 12mo. (First printed in 1767.)

Ar n-Athair a ta air neámh,
Gu naomhaichear t'ainm.
Thigeadh do rìoghachd.
Deanar do thoil air an talamh, mar a nìhear air neámh.
Tubhair dhùinn an diugh ar n-aran laitheil.
Agus maith dhùinn ar fàcha, amhuil mar a mhaithes sinn d'ar luchd-fàcha.
Agus na leig am buairdeadh sinn,
ach saor sinn o olc:
Oiris leat an rìoghachd, agus an cumhachd agus a ghlòir, gu sìorruidh. Amen.

IRISH.

From the version of Uilliam O. Domhnuill, or William Daniel, as published by the British and Foreign Bible Society, London, 1817, 8vo. (First printed in 1692.)

Ar Nathair atá ar neamh, Náomhthar hainm.
Tigheadh do ríoghachd.
Deútar do thóil ar an thalamh, mar do nithéar
ar neamh.
Ar nárán laéthambail tabhair dhúinn a nia.
Agus maith dhúinn ar bhfíocha, mar mhaithmidne dar bhféitheamhnuibh féin.
Agus na léig sinn a ceathughadh,
achd sáor inn é olc:
Oir is leachd féin an ríoghachd, agus an chúm-hachd, agus an ghloir, go síórruighe, Amen.

Agricola, having done much in spite of pride and prejudice to civilize the Britons, conducted the Roman legions to the foot of the Grampians and had to encounter the Caledonians under Galgacus, where the battles, bloodshed, and desolation of the south, in the maintenance of independence, had to be repeated in the north. These powerful opponents seem to have descended from the same Celtic race, though they had probably reached the northern forests by a different route, and many were the encounters in which they bore themselves bravely in skirmishing with the Romans or breaking down the wall that their enemies had stretched from the Forth to the Clyde.

About the commencement of the fourth century, a new enemy approached the British coast; whilst the Goths was pouring his legions into Italy. The Roman soldiers were withdrawn from Britain to defend Rome; and, as the Britons had become to a great extent unaccustomed to war, they, in order to defend their country from the ravages of the Picts and Scots, now invited the Saxons to aid them in their defence.

This brings us to another era in the history of England, and introduces, not another element into the composition of her language, but the very nucleus around which all other ingredients were to cluster. "These Saxons," to use the language of their historian, "in the days of Ptolemy, just darkened the neck of the peninsula of Jutland and three inconsiderable islands in its neighbourhood. One of the obscure tribes, whom Providence selected and trained to form the nobler nations of France, Germany, and England, and who have accomplished their distinguished destiny." These Saxons, who soon lorded it over those whom they had come to aid, were a German or Gothic race, and spoke a language entirely different from that of the Celts, or ancient Britons, and were no doubt settled at an early period in Europe. After many conflicts, which it is the part of the historian to record, we have to note the amalgamation of the British and Saxon population; while a remnant of the Britons retired into Wales, and carried their ancient language along with them,—just as the Celts in Scotland retired before their Gothic invaders to their mountain fastnesses, where their descendants still speak the language of their forefathers, which is closely allied to the Welsh, the Irish, and the Manx.

The success of the first Saxon immigrants no doubt encouraged others of the same race to land on the shores of Britain, and secure for themselves "a local habitation." From a leading branch, called Angles, the country was called England, and the prevailing language became known as Anglo-Saxon, or simply Saxon. The Saxons cultivated literature, and Cædmon, Bede, and King Alfred are well known among their writers. Cædmon has been called the father of English song. Connected with the monks of Whitby, he appears to have acted as their herdsman. He was so little gifted with the power of song, that, when the harp was passed round at any convivial meeting, he shrunk from its approach, and retired to his own apartment. After retiring ashamed from such a meeting, he laid himself down and slept. In his sleep, some one desired him to sing something, to whom he replied that he could not. Upon the repetition of the demand, he asked what he should sing. "Sing me," said the voice in his dreaming ear, "the origin of things." He accordingly composed an ode on this subject, and still retained it in memory when he awoke. He was admitted into the monastery as a monk, and wrote numerous other poems on religious subjects—that on the Fall of Man bearing no small resemblance to some passages in Paradise Lost. His death occurred in the year 680. We subjoin a specimen of this poem, accompanied with a translation:—

Nu we sceolan herian
heofon-rices weard,
metodes mihte,
and his mod-ge-thenc,
wera wuldor fæder!
swa he wundra ge-hwæs,
ece dryhten,
oord onstealde.
He ærest ge-sceop
ylða bearnum
heofon to hrófe,
halig sceppend!
tha middan-geard
mon-cynnes weard,
ece dryhten,
æfter teode,
frum foldan,
frea ælmihtig!

Now we shall praise
the guardian of heaven,
the might of the creator,
and his counsel,
the glory-father of men!
how he of all wonders,
the eternal lord,
formed the beginning.
He first created
for the children of men
heaven as a roof,
the holy creator!
then the world
the guardian of mankind,
the eternal lord,
produced afterwards,
the earth for men,
the almighty master!

It will be observed that these lines are neither distinguished by an exact number of syllables in their construction nor by rhyme in their termination. The lines, however, are nearly of equal length, and a peculiar alliteration may be observed in their composition; for in every couplet, as may be readily noticed in the last of the above quotation, two principal words in the one line begin with the same letter, which is repeated in the first principal word in the second. It is remarkable how early this practice began, which forces itself on our notice as still more extensively employed by subsequent writers, who used the same letter at the beginning of every word in lines of considerable length, as, "They waightit at the wight wine and wared out words."

In Spenser, long after rhyme had been introduced, we find it in a somewhat more refined form, as when alliteration occurs in pairs of words in the same line; thus,

"The lily, lady of the flowery field;"

or,

"Nor timely tides did drive out of their sluggish source;"

or when the same letter is initial in several words, as,

"That art thus fowly fled from famous eniny,"

which readily suggests a line, which proves that this ornament of the earliest Saxon poem is not rejected in the highest poetry of the present day; for Childe Harold, describing the death of the Duke of Brunswick, says that he sat

"Within a window'd niche of that high hall," and, having caught the sound of the cannon's opening roar,

"He rushed into the field, and, foremost fighting, fell."

We shall here present versions of the Lord's Prayer in three collateral languages, that the student may compare them with the Anglo-Saxon:—

DANISH.

From the Danish Bible published by the British and Foreign Bible Society, London, 1855, 8vo.

Vor Fader, du som er i Himlene!
 Helliget vorde dit Navn;
 Komme dit Rige;
 Skee din Villie, som i Himmelen, saa og paa Jorden;
 Giv os i Dag vort daglige Brød;
 Og forlad os vor Skyld, saa som vi forlade vore Skyldnere;
 Og leed os ikke ind i Fristelse,
 men frie os fra det Onde;
 Thi dit er Riget, og Kraften, og Herligheden i Evighed, Amen.

GERMAN.

From Luther's version, as edited by Tischendorf in his "Novum Testamentum Triglotum," Leipzig, 1854. The orthography is modernized. Luther's translation of the New Testament was first published, anonymously, in 1522.

Unser Vater in dem Himmel.
 Dein Name werde geheiligt.
 Dein Reich komme
 Dein Wille geschehe auf Erden wie im Himmel.
 Unser täglich Brot gib uns heute.
 Und vergib uns unsere Schulden, wie wir unsern Schuldigern vergeben.
 Und führe uns nicht in Versuchung, sondern erlöse uns von dem Uebel.
 Denn dein ist das Reich und die Kraft und die Herrlichkeit in Ewigkeit, Amen.

Passing over some names of inferior note, we come to that of BEDA, who is usually denominated the Venerable. He spent his studious life in the monastery of Wearmouth, where he died in 735. His principal works consist of scriptural translations, biographies, and an ecclesiastical history of the Anglo-Saxons. The next name that arrests our attention is that of ALFRED, which brings us to the beginning of the tenth century. He is well known to every reader of history for his successful struggles against the Danish invaders, as an enlightened law-giver, and as he who first gave England a navy that enabled her to assert that superiority on the deep which she has ever since successfully maintained. He claims our notice, however, as a promoter of learning, and cultivator of literature. His literary labours consist chiefly, if not exclusively, of translations of historical and philosophical works, together with the Psalms of David, into the vulgar tongue, in order that his subjects might be profited by their perusal. CÆDRA, whose demise occurred in 1036, was author of a Lallad long popular in England; and a few others, among whom some ecclesiastics are conspicuous, bring down the Anglo-Saxon literature to the time of the Conquest, which thus extends over a space of five hundred years, and in which a fresh interest has of late been manifested by the publication of Dictionaries of the language, and specimens of its literature.

We have thus seen the Briton superseded by the Saxon, and now the Saxon is about to give way to the Norman.

William, Duke of Normandy, known in English history as the Conqueror, cloaked his ambition to reign in Britain by an accusation of sacrilege against Harold, and came armed with a bull of excommunication against the Saxon king and his adherents, and a banner consecrated by the head of the church to shed the blood of Christians! Victory, after a noble contest on the part of the English, declared in favour of the Normans, and ultimately England was in their hands. The victory of Hastings was gained on the 14th October, 1066. The conquest introduced a change of language and literature; for a writer about the middle of the fourteenth century informs us that children were taught to speak French from their cradle, and that even the rustic aped the gentleman by endeavouring to speak French, and thus it is probable that the Normans diffused their tongue to a considerable extent throughout the land. The Saxon language, however, was not conquered, but in the course of the twelfth century it underwent great grammatical changes. The inflectional terminations of nouns, and apparently arbitrary distinctions of genders were abolished; the words were thus shortened, and their sounds must consequently have been altered; and hence may be dated the commencement of the language that is now known as English. Before the conquest, the troubadours had arisen in France, and exercised their poetical talents in the composition of romantic poems; and a Norman poet, named Taillefer, advanced before the army, chanting the ballad of Charlemagne and Roland, and was permitted to strike the first blow on the field of Hastings. Wace, a native of Jersey, about 1160 composed a narrative poem, called Le Brut d'Angleterre (Brutus of England), a work which is worthy of notice, both on account of its embodying the traditional literature that had been wafted down from the days of the Celts, and the tinge it imparted to the works of subsequent authors; for Spenser and Shakspeare were indebted to it. Drayton has reproduced not a little of it, and allusions to it may be found even in the poetry of Milton.

But we are now approaching an important era in English literature; for, according to Dr. Johnson, the Saxon, about 1154, "began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may plainly be discovered." About 1180, LAYMON produced a translation, in English verse, of the Brut d'Angleterre, to which we have already referred; a few lines will show the approximation of the language of that day to that of the present.

He nom tha Engliaca boe
 Tha nakede Seint Beda;
 An other he nom on Latin,
 Tha makede Seinte Albin,
 And the feire Austin,
 The fullut brute hider in.
 Boc'ne nom the thridle,
 Leide there amidlen,
 Tha makede a Frenchis clerc,

Wace was ihoten,
The wel conthe writen,
And he hoe yef thare aethelen
Aelienor, the wes Henries quene,
Thes heyes kinges.
Layamon leide theos boc,
And tha leaf wende.
He heom leofliche bi-hould
Lithe him beo Drihten.
Fetheren he nom mid fingren,
And fiede on boc-felle,
And tha sothe word
Sette to-gathara,
And tha thre boc
Thrumde to ane.

That is, literally:—

He took the English book
That Saint Bede made;
Another he took in Latin,
That Saint Albin made,
And the fair Austin,
That baptism brought hither in.
The third book he took,
[And] laid there in midst,
That made a French clerk,
Wace was [he] called,
That well could write,
And he it gave to the noble
Eleanor, that was Henry's queen,
The high king's.
Layamon laid [before him] these books,
And the leaves turned.
He them lovingly beheld;
Merciful to him be [the] Lord.
Feather [pen] he took with fingers,
And wrote on book-skin,
And the true words
Set together,
And the three books
Compressed into one.

About the end of the thirteenth century, we meet with a series of writers that may be called the RHYMING CHRONICLERS. Among these we meet with ROBERT of Gloucester, the language of whose Chronicle may be judged of from the following specimen:—

"Thus come lo! Engelonde into Normannes honde,
And the Normans ne couthe speke tho bote her owe speche,
And speke French as dude atom, and here chyliden
dude al so teche,
So that hey men of thys lond, that of her blod come,
Holdeth alle thuik speche that hii of hem nome.
Ver bote a man couthe French, me tolt of hym
well lute:
Ac lowe men holdeth to Englyss and to her kunde
speche yute.
Ich wene ther be ne man in world contreyes none
That ne holdeth to her kunde speche, but Eng-lond one.
Ac wel me wot vor to conne bothe wel yt ys,
Vor the more that a man con the more worth he ys."

The next is ROBERT MANNING, who flourished in the latter part of the reign of Edward I., and through that of Edward II. He translated a French Chronicle of England, written by Peter de Langtoft, who was a contemporary of his own. The following specimen is given in modern spelling:—

The Interview of Vortigern with Rowen, the Beautiful Daughter of Hengist.

Hengist that day did his might,
That all were glad, king and knight,
And as they were best in glading,
And well cup-shotten, knight and king,
Of chamber Rowenen so gent,
Before the king in hall she went.

A cup with wine she had in hand,
And her attire was well farand,
Before the king on knee set,
And in her language she him greet.
"Laverd king, wassail!" said she.
The king asked, What should be.
On that language the king ne couthe.
A knight her language lerid in youth,
Breght hight that knight, born Breton,
That lerid the language of Saxon.
This Breght was the latimer,
What she said told Vortigern.
"Sir," Breght said, "Rowen you greets,
And king calls and lord you leets.
This is their custom and their gest,
When they are at the ale or feast,
Ilk man that loves where him think,
Shall say, Wassail! and to him drink.
He that bids shall say, Wassail!
The tother shall say again, Drinkhail!
That says Wassail drinks of the cup,
Kissing his fellow he gives it up.
Drinkhail he says, and drinks thereof,
Kissing him in bourd and skof."
The king said, as the knight gan ken,
"Drinkhail," smiling on Rowenen.
Rowen drank as her list,
And gave the king, syne him kissed.
There was the first wassail in dede,
And that first of fame gned.
Of that wassail men told great tale,
And wassail when they are at ale,
And drinkhail to them that drinke,
Thus was was-sail ta'en to thank.
Fell sithes that maiden ying
Wassailed and kissed the king.
Of body she was right avenant,
Of fair colour with sweet semblant.
Her attire full well it seemed,
Mervelik the king she queemed.
Of our measure was he glad,
For of that maiden he wax all mad.
Drunkenness the fiend wrought,
Of that paen was all his thought.
A mischance that time him led,
He asked that paen for to wed.
Hengist would not draw o life,
Bot granted him all so tite.
And Hors his brother consented soon.
Her friends said, it were to done.
They asked the king to give her Kent,
In dowry to take of rent.
Upon that maiden his heart was cast;
That they asked the king made fast.
I wene the king took her that day,
And wedded her on paen's lay.

"Putting aside," says Professor Craik, "the authors of some of the best of the early metrical romances, whose names are generally or universally unknown, perhaps the earliest writer of English verse, subsequent to the Conquest, who deserves the name of a poet, is LAWANCA MINOR, who lived and wrote about the middle of the fourteenth century, and of the reign of Edward III." His poems are in celebration of the battles and victories of that king. The following specimen, in modernized spelling, is taken from that on Edward's first expedition to France:—

Sir Philip the Valays
Wit his men in the days
To battle had he thought:
He bade his men them purvey
Withouten langer delay;
But he ne held it nought.

He brought folk full great won,
Aye seven agains one,
That full well weaponed were,
Bot soon when he heard ascry
That king Edward was near thereby,
Then durst he nought come near.

In that morning fell a mist,
And when our Englishmen it wist,
It changed all their cheer;
Our king unto God made his boon,
And God sent him good comfort soon;
The weader wax full clear.

Our king and his men held the field
Stalworthly with spear and shield,
And thought to win his right:
With lordes and with knights keen,
And other doughty men bydean
That war full frek to fight.

When Sir Philip of France heard tell
That king Edward in field wald dwell,
Then gained him no glee:
He traisted of no better boot,
Bot both on horse and on foot,
He hasted him to see.

It seemed he was feared for strokes
When he did fell his grete oaks
About his pavilion;
Abated was then all his pride,
For langer there durst he nought bide;
His boast was brought all down.

There is a poetical work of the middle of the fourteenth century that is so often referred to in general literature, that we cannot pass it over in silence. This is the Vision of Piers Ploughman, the author of which is commonly called Robert Langland, but of whom scarcely any thing is known. It is an allegory, on the impediments and temptations that lie in the way of the Pilgrim, and is remarkable for its attacks on the corruptions of the church, and on the indolence and ignorance of the ecclesiastical order. In its structure, regard is had not to the absolute number of syllables in a line, but to the number of accented syllables, while alliteration is still prevalent in its composition—arising partly from custom, and partly from established poetical phraseology. The following extract is taken from the first Pasus, or division:—

I found there freres,
All the four orders,
Preaching the people
For profit of hem selve
Glosed the gospel
As hem good liked;
For covetise of copes
Construed it as they would.
Many of these master freres
Now clothen hem at liking,
For hir money and hir merchandize
Marchen togeders.
For sith charity hath been chapman
And chief to shrive lords,
Many ferlies han fallen
In a few years;
But holy church and hi
Hold better togeders,
The most mischief on mould
Is mounting well fast.
There preached a pardoner,
As he a priest were;
Brought forth a bull
With many bishops' seals,
And said that himself might Assolien hem all,
Of falsenede of fasting,
Of avowes y-broken,
Lewed men leved it well,
And liked his words;
Comen up kneeling
To kissen his bulls:
He bouched hem with his brevet,
And bleared hir eyen,
And raught with his ragman
Ringes and brooches.

This remarkable poem brings us now to the threshold of our living literature; for, although the poem of Langland might be read with interest, yet it would be more on account of its language with one set of readers and of its subject with another, than for gratification in its poetical grace.

CHAUCER, therefore, is still our first great poet—the Homer of English poetry. He is supposed to have been born in 1323, and so may have been contemporary with Langland. The works of Chaucer are voluminous, occupying no fewer than eight volumes of Bell's edition of the English Poets. The best known and most carefully edited of his numerous works, are his Canterbury Tales—although, as we have seen, he was not the first poet who introduced the ornament of rhyme, yet he greatly polished the measure in which he wrote, and is supposed to have been the first who employed the decasyllabic metre, or what has been called our heroic verse. He is recognized by subsequent poets, who ought to be the best judges, as the reformer of the language and their instructor in the tuneful art. Gavin Douglas calls him "Venerable Chaucer, principal poet, but peer," and Spenser, looking back through two centuries, regards him as the "well of English undefiled." We give the following from his famous Tales as a specimen:—

The Good Parson.

A true good man there was there of religion,
Pious and poor—the parson of a town.
But rich he was in holy thought and work;
And thereto a right learned man; a clerk
That Christ's pure gospel would sincerely preach,
And his parishioners devoutly teach.
Benign he was, and wondrous diligent,
And in adversity full patient,
As proven oft; to all who lack'd a friend.
Loth for his tithes to ban or to contend,
At every need much rather was he found
Unto his poor parishioners around
Of his own substance and his dues to give:
Content on little, for himself, to live.
Wide was his cure; the houses far asunder,
Yet never failed he, or for rain or thunder,
Whenever sickness or mischance might call,
The most remote to visit, great or small,
And, staff in hand, on foot, the storm to brave.
This noble ensample to his flock he gave,
That first he wrought, afterward he taught.
The word of life he from the gospel caught;
And well this comment added he thereto.
If that gold rusteth, what should iron do?
And if the priest be foul on whom we trust,
What wonder if the unletter'd layman lust?
And shame it were in him the flock should keep
To see a sullied shepherd, and clean sheep.
For sure a priest the sample ought to give
By his own cleanness how his sheep should live.
He never set his benefice to hire,
Leaving his flock acomber'd in the mire,
And ran to London cogg'ing at St. Pou's,
To seek himself a chauntry for souls,
Or with a brotherhood to be enroll'd;
But dwelt at home, and guarded well his fold,
So that it should not by the wolf miscarry.
He was a shepherd, and no mercenary.
The holy in himself, and virtuous,
He still to sinful men was mild and piteous:
Not of reproach imperious or malign;
But in his teaching soothing and benign.
To draw them on to heaven, by reason fair
And good example, was his daily care.
But were there one perverse and obstinate,
Were he of lofty or of low estate,
Him would he sharply with reproof astound.
A better priest is no where to be found.
He waited not on pomp or reverence,
Nor made himself a spiced conscience.
The lore of Christ and his apostles twelve
He taught: but, first, he followed it himself.
The latter part of the fourteenth century is memorable for what may be considered the birth of

Scottish poetry, and Chaucer had no unworthy contemporary and rival in JOHN BARBOUR, Archdeacon of Aberdeen, the language of whose work, The Bruce, is as intelligible as that of Chaucer. Although Pinkerton's edition is now before us and the following passage has often been quoted, yet it is so characteristic of Barbour's poetry, and the sentiments so honourable to the poet, that we cannot supersede it by another quotation:—

A ! fredome is a nobill thing !
 Fredome mayse man to haiff liking ;
 Fredome all solace to man giffis :
 He levys at ese that frely levys !
 A noble hart may haiff nane ese,
 Na ellis nocht that may him plesse,
 Gyff fredome failhe : for fre liking
 Is tharnyt our all othir thing
 Na he, that ay hase levyt fre,
 May nocht knaw weil the propyrtie
 The angry, na the wrechyt dome,
 That is cowplyt to foule thyrldome.
 Bot gyff he had assayit it,
 Than all perquer he suld it wyt ;
 And suld think fredome mar to pryse
 Than all the gold in warld that is.

And thryldom is weil wer than deid,
 For quhill a thryll his lyff may leid,
 It mervys him, body and banys,
 And dede anoyis him bot anys :
 Schorty to say is nane can tell
 The halle condition of a thryll !

That we may afford a specimen of the prose of the age of which we are treating, we fondly turn to the oldest translation of the New Testament, by John Wiclif, "the morning star of the Reformation," who died about the age of sixty, in 1384. The edition from which we quote is that of Baber, 1810.

1 CORINTHIANS, CH. XIII.

If I speke with tungis of men and of aunghels and I hane not charite, I am maad as bras sownynge, or a cymbal tynklynge. and if I haue profecio and knowe alle mysteries and al kynnyng, and if I hane al feith, so that I moue hillis fro her place, and I hane not charite I am nought. and if I departe alle my goodis into the metis of pore men, and if I bitate my bodi so that I brenne and if I hane not charite it profitith to me no thing. charite is pacient, it is benygne. charite envyeth not, it doith not wickidli, it is not blowun, it is not couetous, it sekith not the thingis that ben hise owne. it is not stired to wrath, it thenkith not yuel, it ioieth not on wickidnesse, but it ioieth togidre to treuthe, it suffrih alle thingis, it bileneth alle thingis, it hopith alle thingis, it susteyneth alle thingis. charite allith neuere doun. whether profecies schulen be voidid, eithir langagis schulen ceese, eithir science schal be distried, for aparti we knowen, and aparti we profecien, but whanne that schal come that is parfyt, that thing that is of parti schal be auoidid. whanne I was a litil child I spak as a litil child, I understoode as a litil child, I thoughte as a litil child ; but whanne I was made a man I voidide tho thingis that weren of a litil child. and we seen now bi a morour in derknesse, but thanne face to face. now I knowe of parti, but thanne I schal knowe as I am knownun. and now dwellen feith, hope and charite theses thre, but the moost of theses is charite.

The earliest successor of Barbour was ANDREW WYNTOWN, a Prior of the monastery of St. Serf's Inch in Lochleven. His Ormyngkil Cronykil of Scotland appears to have been finished in the beginning of the fifteenth century. It is written in the same measure with The Bruce, but we miss the sustained dignity and poetic warmth of the Arch-deacon in the Prior. His work, however, is clear, though quaint in style, and is valuable in an historical point of view ; of the nine books, of which the work consists, only the last four are devoted to Scottish history. These, with valuable notes, were admirably edited by David Macpherson and published in 1795, from which edition we make the following extract, not only as furnishing a specimen of Wyntown's style, but as embodying the oldest Scottish song now known to exist. The Chronicler thus describes the character of Alexander III. :—

Scotland menyd hym than fal sare :
 For wndyr hym all his Legis ware
 In Honour, Qwyete, and in Pes ; Forthicald PASSYRIL KYNE he was.
 He honoryd God and Haly Kyrk ;
 And medful dedis he oysyd to wyrk.
 Til all Prestis he dyd reverens,
 And sawfyd thare Statis wyth diligena.
 He was stedfast in Crystyn Fay ;
 Relygyows men he honoryde ay ;
 He lwyd men, that war wretowens ;
 He lathyd and chastyd al vytowens
 Be Justis he gawe and Eqtyte
 Til ilke man, that his suld be.
 That, he mycht noucht til Wertu drawe,
 He held ay wndyr dowl and awe.
 He gert chasty mysdoaris
 As Lauch wald be thare manerys.
 The Lauch he gert he kepdy welle
 In all hys Kyryk ilka dele.
 He led his lyf in Honeste,
 Devotyoun, and Chastyte.
 Til Lordis, Knychtis, and Sqwyeris,
 That ware plesand of maneris,
 He was lele, iuwand and liberales,
 And all wretuows in Gouernale.
 He was gret of Almows Dede,
 Til all, that he could wyt, had nede.

This Sang was made of hym for-thi.

"Quhen Alysandyr our Kyng was dede,
 That Scotland led in Luwe and Le,
 Away was Sons of Ale and Brede,
 Of Wyne and Wax, of Gamyn and Gle :

"Ours Gold was changyd in-to Lede.
 Cryst, borne in-to Virgynye,
 Succour Scotland, and remede,
 That stad is in perplexite."

But of all the poets of the beginning of the fifteenth century the palm must undoubtedly be awarded to King James I. of Scotland, and, as he was kept a prisoner and educated in England, The King's Quair may be regarded as still furnishing an illustration of the state of the language at that period. Looking in the morning through the grating of his prison, he sees a lady in the adjacent garden, and he thus describes the scene and his emotions:—

— Kest I down mine eye again,
 Where as I saw, walking under the Tour,
 Full secretly, new comen hir to Pours,
 The fairest or the freschest young floure
 That ever I saw, methought, before that houre,
 For which sudden abate, anon astert,
 The blood of all my body to my hert.

And though I stood abasit tho a lyte
 No wonder was ; for why ? my wittis all
 Were so overcome with plesance and deliyght,
 Only through letting of my eye fall,
 That suddenly my hert became hir thrall,
 For ever of free will—for of menace
 There was no takyn in her suete face.

And in my head I drew right hastily,
 And eft sones I leant it out again,
 And saw her walk, that very womanly,
 With no wight mo', but only women twain.
 Then gan I study in myself, and sayne :
 ' Ah, sweet ! are ye a warlily creature,
 Or heavenly thing in likeness of nature ?

' Or are ye god Cupidis own princess,
 And comyn are to loose me out of land ?

Or are ye very Nature the goddess,
That have depaynted with your heavenly hand,
This garden full of flowers as they stand?
What sall I think, alas ! what reverence
Sall I mester unto your excellence ?

' If ye a goddess be, and that ye like
To do me pain, I may it not astert;
If ye be waridly wight, that doth me sike,
Why list God make you so, my dearest hart,
To do a sely prisoner this smert,
That infus you all, and wote of nought but wo ?
And therefore merd, sweet ! sine it is so.' . .

Of hir array the form if I sall write,
Toward her golden hair and rich atire,
In fretwise couchit with perlis white
And great balas lemyng as the fire,
With many ane emeraut and fair saphire;
And on her head a chaplet fresch of hue,
Of plumis parted red, and white, and blue.

Full of quaking spangis bright as gold,
Forged of shape like to the amoretis,
So new, so fresch, so pleasant to behold,
The plumis eke like to the flower jonetis,
And other of shape, like to the flower jonetis;
And above all this, there was, well I wot,
Beautee enough to mak a world to dote.

About hir neck, white as the fire amalle,
A goodly chain of small orfvery,
Whereby there hung a ruby, without faile,
Like to sone heart shapen verily.
That as a sperk of low, so wantonly
Seemed birning upon her white throte,
Now gif there was good party, God it wot.

And for to walk that fresh May's morowe,
Ane hook she had upon her tissue white,
That goodlier had not been seen to-forowe,
As I suppose; and rirt she was alite,
Thus halffing loose for haste, to such delight,
It was to see her youth in goodlihed,
That for rudenes to speak thereof I drede—

In her was youth, beautee, with humble sport,
Bountee, richesse, and womanly faiture,
God better wote than my pen can report:
Wisdom, largesse, estate, and cunning sure,
In every point so guided her mesure,
In word, in dede, in schap, in countenance,
That nature might no more hir child avance!

A new day may be said to dawn with the beginning of the sixteenth century; for Warton says that Hawes's Pastime of Pleasure is almost the only effort of imagination which had appeared in our poetry since the days of Chaucer. Chambers says "it is full of thought, of ingenious analogy, and occasionally of striking allusory," and gives the following stanzas, stripped of the antiquated spelling:—

The Temple of Mars.

Beside this tower of old foundation,
There was a temple strongly edified,
To the high honour and reputation
Of the mighty Mars it was so fortified;
And for to know what it signified
I entered in, and saw of gold so pure
Of worthy Mars, the marvellous picture.

There was depainted all about the wall
The great destruction of the siege of Troy,
And the noble acts to reign memorial
Of the worthy Hector that was all their joy.
His dolorous death was hard to oocyte:
And so when Hector was cast all down,
The hardy Troilus was most high of renown.

And as I cast my sight so aside,
Beholding Mars how wonderfully he stood

On a wheel top, with a lady of pride,
Hauenced about, I thought nothing but good
But that she had two faces in one hood;
Yet I knelt down, and made my orison
To doughty Mars with great devotion.

Saying: ' O Mars ! O god of the war !
The gentle load-star of an hardy heart,
Distill adown thy grace from so far,
To cause all fear from me to start,
That in the field I may right well subvert
The hideous monsters, and win the victory
Of the sturdy giants with famous chivalry.

' O prince of honour and of worthy fame !
O noble knights of old antiquity !
O redoubted courage, the cause of their name,
Whose worthy acts Fame caused to be
In books written, as ye well may see—
So give me grace right well to recure
The power of fame that shall so long endure.'

Among the prose writers of this period, we may take note of ROBERT FABIAN, who was sheriff of London, and died in 1512. The following account of the deposition of King Vortigern, is taken from his Concordance of Stories:—

Of this holy man, St. Germain, Vincent Historial saith, that upon an evening when the weather was passing cold, and the snow fell very fast, he axed lodging of the king of Britain, for him and his companions, which was denied. Then he, after sitting under a bush in the field, the king's herdsman passed by, and seeing this bishop with his company sitting in the weather, desired him to his house to take there such poor lodging as he had. Whereof the bishop being glad and fain, yode unto the house of the said herdsman, the which received him with glad cheer. And for him and his company, willed his wife to kill his only calf, and to dress it for his guest's supper; the which was also done. When the holy man had supped, he called to him his hostess, willing and desiring her that she should diligently gather together all the bones of the dead calf; and them so gathered, to wrapt together within the skin of the said calf. And then it lay in the stall before the rack near unto the dame. Which done according to the commandment of the holy man, shortly after the calf was restored to life; and forthwith ate hay with the dame at the rack. At which marvel all the house was greatly astonished, and yielded thanking unto Almighty God and to that holy bishop.

Upon the morrow, this holy bishop took with him the herdsman, and yode unto the presence of the king, and axed of him in sharp wise, why that overnight he had denied to him lodging. Wherewith the king was so abashed, that he had no power to give unto the holy man answer. Then St. Germain said to him: ' I charge thee, in the name of the Lord God, that thou and thine depart from this palace, and resign it and the rule of thy art to him that is more worthy this room than thou art.' The which all thing by power divine was observed and done; and the said herdsman, by the holy bishop's authority, was set into the same dignity; of whom after descended all the kings of Britain.

Tracing the progress of our language to what has been termed the Elizabethan age (though the literature of the period so denominated, belongs not merely to the sixteenth, but also to the seventeenth century) we then observe a variety of influences, such as the study of classical learning, the invention of printing, the substitution of the philosophy of Plato for that of Aristotle, and the freedom of religious discussion, operating powerfully in expanding the intellect of the nations of Europe. To these general considerations, which could not fail to operate in England, must be added the encouragement which Elizabeth, herself possessed of no mean literary acquirements, offered to learning, and the impulse given to the national mind by the circulation of the Scriptures in the language of her subjects.

THOMAS SACKVILLE, Earl of Dorset, was the author of the Mirror for Magistrates, an extract from which may properly be introduced before we take leave of our reader on the introduction of Spenser.

And next in order sad, Old Age we found:
His beard all hoar, his eyes hollow and blind;
With drooping cheek still poring on the ground,
As on the place where nature him assigned
To rest, when the sisters had untwined
His vital thread, and ended with their knife
The fleeting course to fast declining life:

There heard we him with broke and hollow plaint
Rue with himself his end approaching fast,
And all for nought his wretched mind torment
With sweet remembrance of his pleasures past,
And fresh delights of lusty youth forewaste;
Recounting which, how would he sob and shriek,
And to be young again of Jove beseeke!

But, an the cruel fates so fixed be
That time forepast cannot return again,
This one request of Jove yet prayed he—
That, in such weathered plight, and wretched pain,
As old, accompanied with her loathsome train,
Had brought on him, all were it wo and grief
He might a while yet linger forth his life,

And not so soon descend into the pit;
Where Death, when he the mortal corpse hath slain,
With reckless hand in grave doth cover it:
Thereafter never to enjoy again
The gladsome light, but, in the ground ylain,
In depth of darkness waste and wear to nought,
As he had ne'r into the world been brought:

But who had seen him sobbing how he stood
Unto himself, and how he would bemoan
His youth forepast—as though it wrought him good
To talk of youth, all were his youth foregone—
He would have mused, and marvelled much whereon
This wretched Age should life desire so vain,
And knows full well life doth but length his pain:

Crook-backed he was, tooth-shaken, and blear-eyed;
Went on three feet, and sometime crept on four;
With old lame bones, that rattled by his side;
His scalp all pilled, and he with eld forelore,
His weathered fist still knocking at death's door
Fumbling, and driveling, as he draws his breath;
For brief, the shape and messenger of death.

When we name SPENSER, we feel as if we had arrived among our modern poets. The date, 1553, is given as that of the year of his birth, and he is supposed to have come before the world as a poet so early as 1569. His great work is the Fairy Queens, in which, under the direction of Gloriana, a number of personages, representing so many virtues, set forth to vanquish the vices opposed to their nature. But we feel little interest either in the personages or their adventures; the mind is absorbed in the beauty of the poetry in which these are described; for it is the imagination of the poet in conceiving, and his fancy in adorning these conceptions, together with the exuberance, fluency, grace, and beauty of the language, that delight the reader; whilst a spirit of nobleness, gentleness, love, and chivalry pervades the whole. But we must deny ourselves the pleasure of expatiating on the exquisite productions of Spenser, and permit him briefly to speak for himself, merely stripping his words of a few superfluous letters.

Una and the Redcross Knight.

A gentle knight was pricking on the plain,
Yclad in mighty arms and silver shield,

Wherein old dints of deep wounds did remain,
The cruel marks of many a bloody field;
Yet arms till that time did he never wield;
His angry steed did chide his foaming bit,
As much disdainful to the curb to yield:
Full jolly knight he seemed, and fair did sit,
As one for knightly jousts and fierce encounters fit.

And on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge he wore,
And dead—as living—ever him adored:
Upon his shield the like was also scored,
For sovereign hope, which in his help he had:
Right faithful true he was in deed and word;
But of his cheer did seem too solemn sad:
Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.

Upon a great adventure he was bound,
That greatest Gloriana to him gave—
That greatest glorious queen of fairy lond—
To win him worship, and her grace to have,
Which of all earthly things he most did crave;
And ever as he rode his heart did yearn
To prove his puissance in battle brave
Upon his foe, and his new force to learn;
Upon his foe, a dragon horrible and stern.

A lovely lady rode him fair beside,
Upon a lowly ass more white than snow;
Yet she much whiter, but the same did hide
Under a veil that wimpled was full low,
And over all a black stole she did throw,
As one that inly mourned: so was she sad,
And heavy sat upon her palfrey slow;
Seemed in heart some hidden care she had,
And by her in a line a milk-white lamb she led.

So pure and innocent, as that same lamb,
She was in life and every virtuous lore,
And by descent from royal lineage came
Of ancient kings and queens, that had of yore
Their sceptres stretcht from east to western shore,
And all the world in their subjection held;
Till that infernal fiend with foul uproar
Forewasted all their land and them expelled;
Whom to avenge, she had this knight from far compelled.

Behind her far away a dwarf did lag,
That lazy seemed in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his back. Thus as they past
The day with clouds was sudden overcast,
And angry Jove an hideous storm of rain
Did pour into his leman's lap so fast,
That every wight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

Enforced to seek some covert nigh at hand,
A shady grove not far away they spied,
That promised aid the tempest to withstand;
Whose lofty trees, yclad with summer's pride,
Did spread so broad, that heaven's light did hide,
Nor pierceable with power of any star:
And all within were paths and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far:
Fair harbour, that them seems; so in they entered are.

*• Our limited space has obliged us to present a very imperfect view of an interesting subject, even within the range which we had prescribed to ourselves; but those who may be incited by these remarks still farther to prosecute this study, will find ample materials in the works of Ellis, Chambers, Latham, Craik, Spalding, and other cultivators of the same field.

A CATALOGUE OF ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.

THE following is a Catalogue of English Dictionaries, properly so called; for we have purposely omitted some of the most ancient Dictionaries published in England, such as the Dictionarium of Sir Thomas Elyot, published in 1538, because it was Latin and English; neither have we admitted into this brief list Dictionaries of Theology, Law, Medicine, Chemistry, Arts and Sciences, &c.

"There are many points," says Worcester, "relating to English lexicography that are not easily ascertained. Many of the Dictionaries have had their titles changed from those which were given them in the first edition; many of them have been much altered by the labour of subsequent editors; with respect to some, it is not easy to ascertain the date of the first edition; and some have undoubtedly been published which have passed into oblivion, and are now entirely unknown."

His theological system has been called Baxterianism; it holds a middle way between Calvinism and Arminianism. He was a man of great piety, zeal, and simplicity, with a moving and pathetic way of writing. His industry was great, having published 168 distinct treatises; and few have ever been written to better purposes. Dr. Barrow affirmed that his practical writings were never mended, and his controversial ones seldom confuted.

Dr. Blair's Rhetoric is a work too well known, and too highly estimated, to require a single word in its commendation: that which will recommend this edition over others, is an Introductory Essay on the Rise and Progress of the English Language.
His sermons form a valuable treasure of sound divinity and practical Christianity.
BLUNT'S (REV. J. J.) History of the Reformation, fcp. 8vo		0	3	6
The Reformation is one of the most remarkable events in our history, whether in relation to politics or religion: for its influence was most powerful upon both. The reading, profession, and taste of the author have led him to regard it chiefly in the latter light; and therefore, brief as the sketch is, it will not be found of the nature of an abridgment, but a continuous though succinct account of the rise, progress, and consummation of that great revolution of the Church of England.
"Blunt's History of the Reformation ought to be in the hands of every young person of suitable condition in the kingdom."— Dr. Wordsworth.

---	-----	-----	-----	-----	---	----	---

This celebrated Commentary, now regarded as essential to the library of the Biblical Student, is thus characterized by Dr. Etheridge in his recent admirable Life of Dr. Clarke :—

" Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary on the Holy Scriptures is, on the whole, one of the noblest works of the class in the entire domain of sacred literature. Its luminous expositions of the Law and the Gospel; its earnest and forcible appeals to the conscience of the sinner and the unbeliever; its rich counsels for the well-understood wants of the Christian's inner life; its endless exhibitions of general knowledge, and its valuable aids to the students of those holy tongues in which revelation took its first recorded forms; all will render this book the companion and the counsellor of multitudes as long as the English language may endure. The man who accomplished it achieved immortality, his name having become identified with an indestructible monument of learning and religion."

While true genius is beloved, and true poetry admired, Cowper will not fail to be placed among the greatest poets, the noblest patriots, and the best men.

Cowper has earned for himself a name which will always rank him among the household poets of England; while his prose has been admitted, by the highest authority, to be as immortal as his verse. Such is the recorded testimony of Charles James Fox and the late Robert Hall.

COBBIN'S (REV. INGRAM) CONDENSED COMMENTARY, AND FAMILY EXPOSITION OF THE HOLY BIBLE.

With upwards of 30,000 Notes, critical and explanatory, selected from the works of eminent Biblical Writers of all Ages, Countries, and Denominations, accompanied with Reflections for the Family and Closet.

This work has undergone a complete revision; those unavoidable errors, literal and numeral, though chiefly indeed of a minor character, which occurred in the course of a rapid periodical publication, have been corrected, the former indices enlarged, an Index to the whole Bible added, a Diary for the regular reading of the Scriptures prefixed, and the pages enriched with MORE THAN A THOUSAND EXTRA NOTES, the Editor having availed himself of the use of various valuable Commentaries not before noticed, some of which have recently appeared, so that nothing might be wanted to render the work as complete as possible for the Biblical student and reader.

A New History of the Anglo-Saxons.
By Sir Francis Palgrave. With Illustrative Woodcuts.

This work (as the Preface mentions) was intended in imitation of the "Tales of my Grandfather." "Let me hope," the author says, "that occasionally, whilst the younger branches find amusement in the tales and adventures here brought together, some of the old folks may not be unwilling to take this little summary in hand, as a temporary substitute for the unmanageable folios produced by the unwearied industry of Saville, Twysden, Warton, and Wilkins."

The Reformation in England. By the Rev. I. J. Blunt.

This is a compact, but lively and entertaining, sketch of the Reformation, and the personal history of the founders of our National Church.

The Reformation is one of the most remarkable events in our history, whether in relation to politics or religion; for its influence was most powerful upon both. The reading, profession, and taste of the author have led him to regard it chiefly in the latter light; and therefore, brief as the sketch is, it will not be found of the nature of an abridgment, but a continuous though succinct account of the rise, progress, and consummation of that great revolution of the Church of England.

*. This book is included in the list of works of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

The Trials of Charles the First, and of some of the Regicides. With Biographies of Bradshaw, Ireton, Harrison, &c., and Illustrative Notes, Legal and Historical. Portraits, Views, &c.

A clear and detailed account of the most remarkable and important of English causes célèbres, with a narrative of the distinguishing events of that interesting period of our history.

The Life of John, Duke of Marlborough. By Charles Bucke. Fine Portrait.

Editorial ingenuity, and economy in printing, have reduced the varied annals of the great Marlborough within the grasp of moderate literary industry. The editor has drawn a fair and truthful picture of the martial Duke, lauding his political and public virtues without concealing those blemishes that his warmest advocates confess to be equivocal. When the balance betwixt good and evil is truck, Marlborough stands out in bold relief in the picture of history; and had his brilliant victories been followed by firm and honest treaties, their effects, like those of Waterloo, would have been felt in the happiness of the British dominions.

The Life and Writings of Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra. With Literary and Historical Illustrations, by Thomas Roscoe, Esq. Fine Portrait.

It is not strange that the writings of Cervantes, with the exception of Don Quixote, should have so long remained unknown, since it was generally asserted that "the Spaniards had but one good book, that one which had made all the others ridiculous." The chef-d'œuvre is translated into every language of Europe, while the same author's plays and novels are sealed against all but Spanish scholars; and his chivalrous life, previous to this publication, buried in that oblivion to which the anarchy of Spain had consigned it. Cervantes flourished in the reign of Philip II., and was contemporary with Lope de Vega.

The Life of Nelson. By Robert Southey, Esq., LL.D., Poet Laureate, &c. From Designs by George Cruikshank.

In order to promote the wishes and intention of the author, and to give the work the widest circulation, it has been printed in its present form, at one-third of the original price, with embellishments by the most talented artists.

Many lives of Nelson have been written, but one was yet wanting, clear and concise enough to become a manual for the young sailor, which he may carry about with him till he has treasured up the example in his memory and in his heart.

—Author's Preface.

A work which, as long as the English language is understood, will be regarded as one of the finest monuments that genius ever raised to valour.—Monthly Review.

The Life of Mahomet, Founder of the Religion of Islam, and of the Empire of the Saracens. By the Rev. Samuel Green. Frontispiece.

With the exception of the religion of the Gospel, that of Mahomet has produced the greatest revolution recorded in history, and effected the greatest changes in the state of the civilized world; its history and character, therefore, become an object of curiosity with every enlightened mind. Considered as part of the general annals of the world, unconnected with religion, it furnishes most interesting records of the human race; but viewed as part of the chain of predicted events, having a direct reference to the Christian church, it urges a stronger claim to our attention. The events of Mahomet's life are to be found in works, inaccessible from their costliness, discouraging from their bulk, and sometimes written in Eastern characters. This volume is a compilation from the most authentic.

Journal of an Expedition to Explore the Course and Termination of the Niger. By Richard and John Lander. With Portraits, Engravings, and a Map, showing the Course of the Niger. 2 vols.

With slight encouragement from the Colonial Office, these young men set out on an enterprise which, in all previous instances, had led to death; and all who knew the nature of the climate, and the hardships they must encounter, predicted that the only news their countrymen would ever receive concerning them would be some obscure rumour of their destruction. The narrative shows how often such predictions were on the point of being verified. There is scarcely a misery to be endured by human nature that these young men have not encountered: they have been frequently on the brink of death—they have been imprisoned—they have been sold as slaves—they have been plundered, and obliged to swim for their lives, not sure in the end that they were not swimming into greater danger; and to crown the whole, they have been brutally treated and nearly sacrificed to the cupidity and revenge of savages by one of their own countrymen! In spite of all these obstacles, by means of patience and perseverance, by enthusiasm and resignation, by courage and long-suffering, they finally triumphed over every species of resistance, and, what is more, completely gained their object.

The result of Captain Clapperton's discoveries was a very shrewd guess that the Niger flowed westward, and into the Bight of Benin. With the view of ascertaining this, the Landers were set down at the same point of the coast of Guinea where the former expedition had commenced.

The Life of Marcus Tullius Cicero. By J. F. Hollings. Fine Portrait.

The name of Cicero himself, the universal admiration of his genius, the era in which he flourished, and the part he enacted, bring his memoirs within the circle of subjects suited to domestic education. His Life by Middleton is more acceptable to the learned than the learner; and this conclusion has led to this epitome, in which the text contains the uninterrupted personal memoir of the philosopher in a popular form; while such information as belongs more distinctively to the department of ancient literature, is conveyed by means of notes and references.

Six Months in the West Indies. By Henry Nelson Coleridge, M.A., Map.

This work, which has already received public approbation, is calculated to amuse in no ordinary degree; for the descriptions of scenery are vivid, the pictures of society graphic, and the adventures and anecdotes interesting and varied.

Lives of the most eminent British Painters, Sculptors, and Architects. By Allan Cunningham. 6 vols., with fine Portraits.

The author has collected, in six small volumes, the history of art in England, and the lives, characters, and works of its professors; the materials for which were previously scattered through many volumes. On this account, these biographies have been considered a valuable acquisition to literature; and although the critical observations will render them valuable to the student, yet, being free from the dry technicalities of virtù, and abounding with personal anecdote, they are not less alluring to the ordinary reader.

The annals of art, and the lives of its followers, though deficient in the spirit-stirring incidents of the warrior and the politician, possess an interest not less attractive. The labours and struggles of genius, the success of perseverance, and the intuitivity of natural talent separated from prudence, as exemplified in these biographies, will afford a useful moral lesson, at the same time that the perusal of the stories of such lives is a source of pleasure and entertainment.

The History of the Jews. By the Rev. H. H. Milman, Dean of St. Paul's, 3 vols. With original Maps and Woodcuts.

With the exception of Josephus, we have no historian of the Jews; and he lived at a period too remote and too limited to enable him to do justice to his subject. It is true, many events have been narrated by Rollin, and the authors of the Universal History, and noticed by commentators; but a narrative at once Christian and liberal in its tone, spirited and elegant in its language, and depicting, with something like kindred enthusiasm and eloquence, the manners, wars, religion, and policy of the most extraordinary of nations, was still wanting.

The object of the present work is strictly historical, yet it affords elucidation of many obscure passages in the Old Testament; avails itself of the casual evidence of Heathen writers; and throws new light on the manners and customs of the "unchanging East," by reference to the ablest modern travellers.

The Natural History of Insects. Illustrated. 2 vols.

The study of Natural History is at all times pleasing and instructive: the object on this occasion has been to render it doubly captivating by a plain and simple style, and by the numerous engravings. The extravagant price of books of Natural History has deterred many; and it is no exaggeration to assert, that the information and embellishments contained in these volumes could hardly be purchased in any other form at a cost of less than double the price.

The Life of Ali Pasha of Tepeleni, Vizier of Epirus. By R. A. Davenport. Fine Portrait.

It is a common error to imagine that a greater number of individuals rise in England than in other countries: more, certainly, attain wealth and respectability under free than despotic governments; but it is under the latter only that the very humblest and most illiterate, if possessed of courage and cunning may approach to the steps of the throne itself. Of the numerous examples which Turkish history affords, none ran a more celebrated career than Ali Pasha. Rendering himself independent by a series of rebellions, his throne was supported by the blood of thousands; yet, notwithstanding the means by which he acquired power, Napoleon treated with him, Lord Byron was his guest, and England accepted his friendship. Turkish history, being a record of the indulgence of the worst passions of human nature, is always a terrible romance; but the life of Ali Pasha exceeds in guilt and horror the most infamous periods of Ottoman history. The great tragedy in which he performed so principal a part, was concluded by his own assassination in the throne-room of his palace, in a manner almost too merciful for such a ferocious monster.

The History of British India. By the Rev. G. R. Gleig, F.R.S. With a Map and Engravings. 4 vols.

A History of India, in a portable form and familiar style, having been considered a desideratum, the present work was undertaken. It commences with the early annals and first civilization of the Hindoos; traces the progress and decline of the Mahometan power; and brings the history of the success of the British arms down to the permanent establishment of the East India Company, and the foundation of that stupendous empire. It is among the annals of the east that the real romance of history must be sought. In the variety of marvellous incidents, the unexpected turn of events, the sudden alternation of fortune, we might fancy we were reading an Oriental fable—a tale from the Arabian Nights—rather than sober history.

Sketches from the History of Venice. With 8 Views after Prout, 29 Cuts after Titian, Maps, &c. 2 vols.

Few can explore for themselves the treasures of the Italian chronicles. The author of this work has laid open their stores for the benefit of English readers, gleaning from them characteristic incidents, amusing stories, and anecdotes, while he has sustained all the dignity of historical research.

The writer has avoided the mistakes into which mere compilers fall:—he has not sunk into a mere annalist, transcribing a dry register of facts; but he either passes over entirely, or touches very slightly, events of minor importance, and reserves himself for those more momentous and interesting transactions which require to be more fully displayed. The beauty of style in which these volumes are written has attracted general notice, and the applause of the most competent judges: in this respect, indeed, they yield to no work of the series.

Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft. By Sir Walter Scott, Bart. Frontispiece.

No subject could have been better adapted to the lamented author of Waverley, than "the history of that dark chapter of human nature" to which this volume is devoted. Sir Walter has given sufficient evidence, in his novels and romances, of his acquaintance with the superstitions of our own and remoter times. In this volume he has laid open the stores of his memory and reading, has condensed and elucidated the subject; in many cases, explaining by natural causes occurrences supposed to be supernatural.

Letters on Natural Magic. Addressed to Sir Walter Scott. By Sir David Brewster, K.G.H. Illustrated with upwards of 80 Engravings.

The author of this volume passes under review "the principal phenomena of nature, and the leading constructions of art, which bear the impress of a supernatural character," and more especially "those singular illusions of sense, by which the most perfect organs either fail to perform their functions, or perform them faithfully, and where the efforts and the creations of the mind predominate over the direct perceptions of external nature."

These are themes full of interest, and worthy of the labour bestowed upon them by the philosophic author. It is lamentable to think how many minds rest contented with the most unphilosophical apology for ignorance, by designating the acts they do not examine wonders or mysteries; while, to the mass of men, such acts are inexplicable except on some theory of superhuman agency, as absurd as it is erroneous. The Letters of Sir David Brewster will disabuse both classes. To the first, he furnishes philosophical data for explaining many hitherto puzzling appearances; to the last, he supplies the means of escape from absurdities calculated to retain them in mental slavery.

The eye and the ear are, of course, the great organs of deception; and, accordingly, optical illusions occupy a considerable portion of the volume. The illusions depending on the ear succeed; and after these we are treated with amusing descriptions of feats of strength, of mechanical automata, and of some of the more popular wonders of chemistry. Under each of these divisions, anecdotes of the most interesting kind illustrate the author's explanations; and no subject, in itself grave and important, was ever, on the whole, treated in a more amusing manner.

Life and Times of Washington. By Cyrus R. Edmonds, 2 vols. Illustrated.

As the foundation of the American Republic is attributable to British error, its history is identified with our own. Those who have related the events of that memorable period, and drawn the character of the patriot general, living too near the epoch, were dazzled, and discovered only the beauty of republican principles. Written when party feeling had died away, and limited monarchy allowed to vindicate its superiority, Mr. Edmonds' Life of Washington is free from that nationality which disfigures biography, and fearlessly defends British institutions against the advocates of democracy. The more voluminous memoirs of the virtuous republican chief abound with American prejudices: these volumes are English, both in style and sentiment.

The Life of Napoleon Buonaparte. By J. G. Lockhart. With 15 Engravings on Steel and Wood, by Finden and Thomson; the Woodcuts from Designus by George Cruikshank. 2 vols.

The fact that, since the publication of this work, SEVEN AND TWENTY THOUSAND copies have been disposed of in this country, besides various editions in America, will speak more in its favour than the most artful and high-flown praise. It is an epitome of all that has been proved to be true concerning the career of the most extraordinary man of the last thousand years. We possessed no previous epitome of his history; and, notwithstanding the smallness of space into which it is compressed, the narrative is clear. The Life of Napoleon, doubly interesting when relieved of the tediousness of useless detail, has never been better told. Volumes so rich in information will be read by youth, and are worthy to be consulted by the maturest reader.

The work is written with fairness and impartiality, free from party spirit; and the author has interwoven with his narrative all the new illustrations and anecdotes furnished by Bourrienne and the other fast-following memoirs of the French press.

The Ruins of Ancient Cities. By Charles Bucke. Illustrated. 2 vols.

Cities, like men, flourish and decay, and each possess their annals. The poetic conception of personifying these broken records of natural grandeur originated with the editor himself; but, in carrying out his design, he acknowledges Rollin as his guide. This elegant and accurate writer confesses that he does not hesitate to rifle the cabinets of others to enrich his own; that he often transcribed without quoting, and introduced solid reflections borrowed from the sterling works of others. This compilation is also a beautiful bead-roll, the precious production of many minds: it is a fair fabric of costly materials raised by a literary architect, whose industry, experience, and candour are already acknowledged by the public.

Salmagundi; or, the Whim-Whams and Opinions of Launcelot Large, Esq. Illustrated by George Cruikshank.

The earliest paintings of the greatest masters sometimes differ considerably from those of their maturer years, and not unfrequently surpass them in brilliancy and freshness. If the Salmagundi papers be compared with the subsequent works of the same author, they will not be found inferior in originality, vivacity, or virtuous tendency. While satire is the adopted weapon of chastisement, it wounds the vicious only. "We have," say the authors, "no fear of the censures of the wise, good, or fair; for they will ever be sacred from our attacks. We reverence the wise, love the good, and adore the fair; we declare ourselves champions in their cause—in the cause of morality; and we throw our gauntlet to all the world besides."

The Life of Peter the Great. By John Barrow, F.R.S., Author of "The Eventful History of the Mutiny of the Bounty." With Portrait.

The author of this Biographical Memoir has arranged the scattered fragments of Histories, Lives, Anecdotes, and Notices, manuscript or print, of one of the most extraordinary characters that ever appeared in the world, in any age or country; being full of contradictions, yet consistent: a promoter of literature, arts, and sciences, yet without education. "He gave a polish," says Voltaire, "to his nation, and was himself a savage; he taught his people the art of war, of which he was himself ignorant; from the first glance of a cock-boat, five hundred miles from the sea, he became an expert ship-builder, created a fleet, partly constructed with his own hands, made himself an expert sailor, a skilful pilot, a great captain: in short, he changed the manners, the habits, the laws of the people, and the very face of the country."

Sketches of Imposture, Deception, and Credulity. By the late R. A. Davenport. Fine Portrait.

Credulity is so comprehensive a term, that greater difficulties are encountered in selecting than multiplying examples. These Sketches take an extensive range over the Pagan superstitions; tell of pretended Messiahs, false prophets, and mock miracles; describe Hindoo and other Oriental deceptions in religious worship; relate of royal impostors, military stratagema, literary cheats, and commercial bubbles; unfold the mysteries of thefts and forgeries; and conclude with an interesting account of the delusions of alchemy and medical frauds. The work may be considered as a supplement to Scott's "Letters on Demonology," and Brewster's on "Natural Magic."

The Chronicles of London Bridge. By an Antiquary (Thompson.) Illustrated.

This is an original work; and the reader will at once perceive that the nomis umbra of "an Antiquary" conceals a mind of no ordinary mould, the possessor of no common store of erudition. A velvet cushion has been the nucleus of the History of the Reformed Church; a library chair that of a History of Literature. In this volume London Bridge is selected as the bond that is to bind, the avenue that is to lead from ancient to modern London. Much valuable civic history and legend is here adorned with language precise, classical, and nervous; while the illustrations, fifty-six in number, preserve more perfect reminiscences of society and manners in the olden time, than the most technical and laboured descriptions.

The Sketch-Book of Geoffrey Crayon. Esq. Fine Plates. 2 vols.

Had Mr. Irving left no other memorial of his genius than the Sketch-Book, it would be alone sufficient to a pedestal in the Palatine Library of the nineteenth century. Justly may he contend with the "Enchanter of the North" in the rare quality of story-telling; for never was a tale more pleasantly told than "The Legend of the Sleepy Hollow." Neither is there a more exquisitely beautiful or sentimental fragment, in all the heart-moving scenes drawn by that able and amiable writer, than Irving's sketch of "The Broken Heart."

Voyages and Discoveries of the Companions of Columbus. By Washington Irving. Illustrated.

The extraordinary actions and adventures of these men may be said to unite romance and truth. Chivalry had left the land, and launched upon the deep in the ships of these Spanish discoverers. Contempt of danger, and fortitude in suffering—a passion for vain-glorious exploit, and a bigoted zeal for the propagation of their faith—were the characteristics of these marine heroes. The extravagant career of the daring Ojeda, particularly his adventures along the coast of Terra Firma, and the wild shores of Cuba—the sad story of Nicuesa—the singular cruise of Juan Ponce de Leon, who fell upon the coast of Florida in his search after an imaginary fountain of youth—and, above all, the chequered fortunes of Vasco Nunez de Balboa, whose discovery of the Pacific Ocean forms one of the most beautiful and striking incidents in the history of the New World—are so many examples of knight-errantry upon the high seas. The charm of Mr. Irving's style has never been displayed more strikingly than in this little manual of true romance.

The Universal History from the Creation of the World. By Alexander Fraser Tytler, Lord Woodhouselee. 6 vols.

Perhaps few works in general literature were ever produced more synthetically, or with more vigilant caution, than "The Universal History." Mr. Gilpin requested his most learned and judicious friends to criticise his mss., and for many years they were submitted to this wholesome ordeal. The Universal History first appeared in the form of Lectures, and was received with the most entire approbation of the students. The sketch thus carefully made for oral delivery was gradually filled up, and the picture completed in every part.

The author's style is terse, lucid, and nervous; and his plan not only moral, but more instructive than any hitherto pursued in treating of general history.

The Life of Sir Isaac Newton. By Sir David Brewster, K. G. H. Illustrated.

This is the only extended life of the greatest of English philosophers. In attempting to fill up this gap in our philosophic and scientific literature, Sir David Brewster has not only sought out, from resources hitherto unknown, every fresh and novel particular regarding his life, but has given the most lucid explanations of Newton's great discoveries, and has endeavoured to render these intelligible to all classes of readers.

A Journal of the Plague Year. By Daniel De Foe. A New Edition, with Historical Notes by E. W. Brayley, F.S.A. Illustrated by George Cruikshank.

From De Foe's History of the Plague we may derive more information than from all the other publications on the subject put together. He has collected all the facts attending the rise, progress, and termination of the malady; an accurate report of the number of deaths, as published by authority; a faithful account of the regulations adopted to arrest and mitigate its fury. But that which imparts life to the whole, and forms its distinguishing feature, is its descriptive imagery. The effects upon the affrighted minds of the inhabitants are depicted with all the genuine pathos of nature, without any aim at effect, but with the ease and simplicity of real life.

A Classical Tour through Italy. By the Rev. T. Chetwode Eustace. New Edition, with great Additions, and Translations of the various Quotations from Ancient and Modern Authors. 3 vols.

It was the fate of Eustace, like that of Bruce, to see his labours rejected, and his veracity impeached: nor did these painful insinuations originate in the chance of ignorance. His honesty was also called in question. But truth in both instances eventually prevailed, and the writings of both these amiable but injured travellers are now appealed to as standard works. Eustace's Journey is not only the most accurate in topography, architecture, and politics; but is, par excellence, the classical tour through this land of poetry and painting. Those tourists who would soar above Eustace, have vainly sought to depreciate his learning. Those whose lot was cast below him, have gathered from his rich plumage; but neither had the courage to pass him by in silence. In this edition, which is sold at one-third the cost of the earlier ones, the discoveries made by excavation since the author's death have been introduced.

The Eventful History of the Mutiny and Piratical Seizure of the Bounty. By John Barrow, F.R.S. Illustrated.

The author of this little volume has brought into one connected view what has hitherto appeared only in detached fragments—and some of these not generally accessible—the historical narrative of an event which deeply interested the public at the time of its occurrence, and from which the naval service in particular, in all its ranks, may still draw instructive and useful lessons.

The story in itself is replete with interest. We are taught by the book of sacred history, that the disobedience of our first parents entailed on our globe of earth a sinful and a suffering race. In our time there has sprung up from the most abandoned of this sinful family—from pirates, mutineers, and murderers—a little society which, under the precepts of that sacred volume, is characterized by religion, morality, and innocence. The discovery of this happy people, as unexpected as it was accidental, and all that regards their condition and history, partake so much of the romantic as to render the story not ill adapted for an epic poem.—Author's Preface

The Life and Times of Richard I., surnamed Cœur de Lion, King of England. By W. E. Aytoun, D.C.L., author of "Bothwell," "Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers," &c.

None of our monarchs has achieved a wider fame than Cœur de Lion, yet his personal history is of all others least studied or understood. All men know that he rebelled against his father, but comparatively few are aware of the cause. All know that he conducted a crusade, and encountered Saladin; but few are acquainted with the extent of his conquests, or the causes which drove him back a fugitive to Europe. No period of the romantic ages is more interesting, or better entitled to a close examination.

Narratives of Peril and Suffering. By the late R. A. Davenport, Esq. 2 vols.

This wide field for the display of taste, talent, and general acquaintance with the history of man in his social character, has been occupied by the late R. A. Davenport, Esq., a veteran in elegant literature; and the popularity which his selections from the children of sorrow has acquired, is equal to that of his most successful labours. In collecting so many tales of woe and of enterprise, the author disclaims the mere vanity of having produced a work of amusement; he seeks to inculcate the salutary lesson, "that there are few things that may not be accomplished by perseverance and courage, accompanied by self-command and presence of mind."

The Life of Bruce, the African Traveller. By Sir Francis B. Head, Bart.

Bruce's Travels, as originally published, occupy five quarto volumes, mixed up with Abyssinian history, and speculations of Egyptian mythology. The author has contrived to compress into this little volume the best parts of Bruce's life and voluminous and extensive travels, without omitting one incident of importance and interest. He has vindicated the character of Bruce, by confronting the statements of his accusers with the testimony of later travellers. The narrative had been allowed universally to possess the interest of a romance, from the graphic style in which he has described his adventures and sufferings, and the strange people and countries which he visited; but Major Head has secured for Bruce the credit of a trustworthy authority, in addition to the reputation of an entertaining narrator.

The Court and Camp of Buonaparte. With a full-length Portrait of Prince Talleyrand, and other Portraits.

This volume is a suitable and indispensable companion to the Life of Napoleon. It contains the cream "of many hundred volumes," in the shape of Memoirs, Lives, Narratives, Anecdotes, &c., connected with Buonaparte, with which the press of France has for years been teeming. It presents rapid, but vigorous, sketches of the Emperor's brothers, wives, sisters, ministers, marshals, and generals; and those who wish for competent knowledge of "Napoleon and his Times," will find no work in the English language which conveys such information in a more concise shape or a more lively manner.

Lives of Eminent British Physicians. New Edition, with additional Lives. Fine Portraits and Woodcuts.

The Lives of Physicians furnish a theme by no means deficient in interest and value. From them have proceeded some of the greatest benefactors of the human race; their history abounds in instances of individuals, who, obscure and small, have, by the vigour of their understanding and their perseverance, raised themselves among the great of the land. The memoirs of Cullen, Hunter, and Baillie, afford striking examples of talent and perseverance triumphing in the midst of difficulties.

Of the topics discussed in the course of this volume, the most prominent are:—The discovery of the circulation of the blood by Harvey; the sweating sickness in the time of Edward III.; a sketch of the great Plague of London in 1664-5; and Jenner's invaluable discovery of vaccination.

To this edition the names of Clutterbuck, Paris, Merriman, Chambers, and Halford, have been added.

The Life and Actions of Alexander the Great. By the Ven. John Williams, A.M., Archdeacon of Cardigan. Maps.

The above work is chiefly intended for youthful readers, who may feel a wish to trace the extraordinary progress of Alexander, with due attention to geography and chronology. The study of history, unconnected with these two branches of knowledge, is mere trifling, and may be beneficially superseded by the historical romance. But as there is something more wholesome and invigorating to the mind in the naked perception of truth than in all the glowing colours of fancy, I trust that this narrative may in some degree attract the attention of the English reader.

Lives of Individuals who raised themselves from Poverty to Eminence or Fortune. By the late R. A. Davenport, Esq.

The object of this work is not merely to inculcate a moral lesson to youth, but to encourage virtue generally by creating submission to the law of opinion. When mankind perceive meritorious exertions in every rank rewarded, and in numerous instances crowned with success, they are more strongly supported in their resistance to difficulties, and more boldly encounter and conquer them. This single volume includes the most varied memoirs; whence it will appear that industry and perseverance, accompanied by rectitude of intention, obtain their merited reward in every civilized nation of our globe.

History of the Mutiny at Spithead and the Nore. By J. Neale, Esq., author of "Cavendish." With an Inquiry into its Origin and Treatment. With a Portrait of Richard Parker.

Resistance to authorities necessarily enlists so few abettors, that, even when it originates in cruelty, injustice, and injury, its correction is demanded by the voice of the nation. To this feeling must be traced the flagrant partiality of our historians in describing the Mutiny of the Nore, and their misrepresentation of the causes of that calamity. Viewed at this distance of time, it is remembered as the foundation of that splendid and perfect discipline which has ever since pervaded and adorned the fleet, and as the cause for abolishing the despotic practice of impressment. But from these memorable movements legislators may receive a lesson, and learn how much more faithful freemen are than slaves to a state in danger, and more binding the ties of gratitude and affection than the terror of tyranny. This is the moral deduced from the Mutiny of the Nore in the present history.

Tour through South Holland and Up the Rhine. With Ten Views, from Designs of Lieutenant-Colonel Batty.

It is strange that the history and condition of Holland should be so little known, and that it till now should never have been made the subject of a popular work. The object of this little book is not merely to afford entertainment, but to furnish that valuable and practical information, which will render it a desirable guide-book to all who are tempted to take a summer's trip across Holland, up the Rhine, and through Belgium; visiting Rotterdam, the Hague, Amsterdam, Cologne, Coblenz, Frankfurt, Brussels, and Antwerp.

but with spirit-stirring descriptions of old customs, delightful woodcuts of old buildings, as well as many a fine secret learned amongst the woods and fields, and whispered by the "season's difference." Heaven forbid, that I should agree with Hone, either in principles or politics; yet not the less must I declare that he has deserved well of the Naturalist, the Antiquarian, and the Poet, by his Every-Day Book and Table Book.—Blackwood's Magazine.

In Southey's Life of Bunyan is the following paragraph:—

"In one of the volumes collected from various quarters, which were lent to me for this purpose, I observe the name of W. Hone, and notice it that I may take the opportunity of recommending his Every-Day Book and Table Book to those who are interested in the preservation of our local and national customs. By these curious publications their compiler has rendered good service in an important department of literature, and he may render it yet more if he obtain the encouragement which he well deserves."

To him (William Hone) we owe those capital Table Books, Every-Day Books, and Year Books, full of anecdote, quaint research, and folk-lore, which have amused and instructed so many thousands.—Cornhill Magazine.

The chief interest in a volume like this arises from comparing the various ways in which prison poets have treated the same theme, particularly when dealing with dreams of liberty, and daisied fields, and messages of love to one who is not the gladder for being free. Young readers especially may find profit in making these comparisons; for the pursuit should lead them to a study of the poets generally—our own and those of foreign lands, where there is no lack of fettered minstrels.—Athenæum.

ORTON'S (REV. JOB) Sacramental Meditations, 8vo	0	2	6

The spirit of his Sacramental Meditations is reverent, sober, and devout.

Job Orton is well-known as the personal friend of the celebrated Doddridge. He was a man of strong sense, sound learning, of exemplary candour, and extensive information, being remarkably well read, especially in English Theology. His numerous letters are a treasure to theological students and to ministers, and his discourses, which are eminently practical, are characterized throughout by Christian simplicity, and a nervous eloquence.

--	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	---	----	---

This edition of the Works of Paley was intended to combine, in one handsome volume, all the published labours of that great man; uniting closeness of arrangement with clearness and beauty of type. It is also furnished with copious notes, marking, for instance, the discoveries of science, illustrative of the existence of a Divine Contriver, or Creator, which have been made since Paley produced his immortal Natural Theology; and biographical sketches of those of the author's friends who patronized or assisted him, or whose works he has quoted, have been added.

"Oh, if I were fond and ambitious of literary honour, of public applause, how well content should I be to excite but one-third of the admiration which, in my inmost being, I feel for the head and heart of Paley! And how gladly would I surrender all hope of contemporary praise, could I even approach to the incomparable grace, propriety, and persuasive fertility of his writings! But on this very account, I believe myself bound, in conscience, to throw the whole force of my intellect in the way of this triumphal car, on which the tutelary genius of modern Idolatry is borne, even at the risk of being crushed under the wheels."—Coleridge.

Each volume has been most carefully re-edited, and all important alterations made to secure a high standing amongst parents and teachers. In pursuing this object, the editors have enlivened their graver topics with personal adventures, and drawn an easy outline adapted to the taste and knowledge of children. To conclude, there is more difficulty, and more importance, than is generally supposed in this humble species of literature. The difficulty of it arises from the want of a language, at the same time copious enough to express a great variety of ideas, and simple enough for the limited comprehension of children; the importance of it lies in the powerful aid which it is capable of giving to the cause of infant education.

PATRICK'S (BISHOP, English Edition) Commentary on the Historical, and Paraphrase of the Poetical Books of the Old Testament; Bishop Lowth on the Prophets; Dr. Arnald on the Apocrypha; Dr. Whitby on the Gospels and Epistles; and Lowman on the Revelation; a new and greatly improved edition, 4 vols. imp. 8vo	3	3	0
Calf, extra	4	10	0

In the previous editions of this work the Annotations were printed without the text, thus rendering it a mere book of reference for the study. In this edition the Text is placed at the head of each page, thus adapting it for general use both in the family and in the closet.

One of the best commentaries in the language. HORNE'S INTRODUCTION.

In this unrivalled Collection of the best Annotations of the Holy Scriptures, the judicious and erudite labours of SIMON PATRICK, D.D., Bishop of Ely, are most conspicuous, occupying more than Two Volumes, (2248 pages.) Next in order comes the valuable "Commentary upon the Larger and Lesser Prophets, by WILLIAM LOWTH, B.D., Prebendary of Winchester," and father of the learned Robert Lowth, D.D., Bishop of London. This is followed by "A Critical Commentary upon the Apocryphal Books, by RICHARD ARNALD, B.D., Rector of Thurstaston." The Fourth Volume contains the clear and copious Paraphrase and Commentary on the Gospels, Acts, and Epistles, by DANIEL WHITBY, D.D., Precentor of Salisbury: and a luminous Paraphrase and Annotations on the Revelation of St. John, by the learned MOSES LOWMAN.

Modern readers have now a better opportunity than their seniors had, of appreciating the profound erudition, literary energy, moral wealth, and sanctified genius of BISHOP PATRICK, by the perusal of his Miscellaneous Works, which have been lately published in Nine Vols., 8vo, under the able editorship of the Rev. Alexander Taylor, A.M. His performance has received a brief notice in the "Times" newspaper, from which we take the subjoined extract: "This first collected edition of Patrick's writings, bulky as it is, would have been twice as voluminous, HAD MR. TAYLOR INCLUDED HIS COMMENTARIES AND PARAPHRASES UPON HOLY SCRIPTURE. These are so commonly in the hands of theological students, that a further edition of them was uncalled for; and we approve of Mr. Taylor's discretion in declining a superfluous duty."

None of the celebrated men who flourished about the time of the Revolution (1688) surpassed this accomplished Bishop in the diversity and importance of those subjects which engrossed his attention, and to which he devoted his literary talents. The highest distinction, however, unanimously awarded to him, will always be the eminent rank which he continues to hold among all other orthodox Christians, as an erudite Biblical critic and sound divine. Gill and Lightfoot may, by some, be reckoned as his equals in oriental learning; but he excelled both of them in the exercise of good taste and a clear judgment, in the application of Rabbinical lore to the elucidation of Holy Writ. The "Table of Authors cited," prefixed to his Commentary, contains above three hundred and fifty names of men of renown, placed in alphabetical order, not for display, but as acknowledged contributories to this rich treasury of sacred learning.

Edward Burton, D.D., was the editor, that by the Rev. W. S. Dobson, A.M., and the more recent one by the Rev. Temple Chevallier, B.D., all of whom were well qualified for the task, and have performed it in a style highly creditable to themselves, and beneficial to religion and literature.

The poetry of Quarles was not only poetry, but strong theological food—Masson's Life of Milton.

Had Quarles been (says Fuller) contemporary with Plato, that great back-friend to poets, he would not only have allowed him to live, but advanced him to an office in his Commonwealth. Some poets, if debarred profaneness, wantonness, and satiricalness, that they may neither abuse God, themselves, nor their neighbours, have their tongues cut out in effect. Others only trade in wit at the second hand, being all for translations, nothing for invention. Our Quarles was free from the faults of the first, as if he had drunk of Jordan instead of Helicon, and slept on Mount Olivet for his Parnassus, and was happy in his own invention. His visible poetry, I mean his "Emblems," is excellent, catching therein the eye and fancy at one draught; so that he has out-Alciated Alciat therein in some men's judgments.

The present edition of Sale's Translation of the Koran will, it is hoped, possess some advantages over every other. Many useful notes, and several hundred various readings, are added from the French version by Savary. Of the various readings, the major part give a different meaning from that which is adopted by the English translator; while the others, though agreeing with his idea of the text, are more poetically expressed. A sketch of the life of Sale is also prefixed to this edition.

SPECTATOR (THE) with Lives of the Authors, and eight fine Portraits, engraved on steel by E. Finden, medium 8vo	0	8	6
--	---	---	---

The fame of Addison chiefly rests on the "Spectator." The Essays in it most valuable for humour, invention, and precept, are the product of his pen. When originally produced, it was the most popular book of the time; and so great was its reputation, that sometimes 20,000 copies were sold in one day. It went its way through every part of the kingdom, and was alike the recreation of the learned, the busy and the idle.—Cleveland's English Literature.

Editions of Thomson are always welcome to us when they show any real love of the subject, as those of Mr. Nichols' unquestionably do. He has adopted Murdoch's Life, which is decidedly the best summary of the facts; has added a number of careful and interesting notes and comments; and has taken great and very successful pains with the text. This is an editor's greatest debt to Thomson, as poetical readers know. Of no great poet are there so many corrupt editions sanctioned by persons of authority. Thomson's own carelessness seems to have descended to his publishers and commentators; and though idleness was pleasant in the poet, and laziness took a charm from his luxurious example, one is apt to be impatient of it in such folk as editors and critics. Mr. Bolton Corney put forth the best modern text, and Mr. Nichols is quite sensible of Mr. Corney's merits in that respect. Let us not omit to mention the graceful engravings, from very pleasing designs of Mr. Gilbert; or the capital head of the poet given from Paton's drawing, in which we have all the good-natured heaviness of Thomson's character. — Examiner.

A considerable deficiency has been frequently apparent in former editions of the writings of this great man, with reference to the notes upon his poems. For the first time this defect is remedied; for in the work before us most copious notes are introduced, and in so careful and explanatory a manner as to be highly useful. Thomson's writings, particularly the "Seasons," are pregnant with beauties of the highest poetical order; in fact, it has been considered the most chaste and elegant composition in our language. Criticism on it now would be out of place; but we may be allowed to testify to the admirable arrangement of the present volume. A biographical notice of Thomson, with an account of his writings, both compiled in an elaborate shape, occupy the first part of the volume. The "Seasons" follow in due order, and are succeeded by his dramatic, lyrical, and didactic poems, as well as the whole of his juvenile poems. To crown all, there are a number of choice engravings, illustrating different portions of his writings, that add not a little to the beauty of the volume.

Among the many works which he (Mr. J. Nichols) edited, there are two, at least, which cannot be surpassed for judgment, zeal, care, and scholarship, on the part of the editor, namely, the Poetical Works of Thomson, and the Complete Works of Dr. Young.—Athenæum, Dec. 7th, 1861.

"In preparing this edition of the 'Night Thoughts' for the press, I have," says the editor, "had the advantage of consulting at my leisure all the early impressions now enumerated, with many others of a subsequent date; especially one of great excellence, a Trade Book (published in 1796), in which the editor restored to the text all the verses which Young had deleted in his several revisions. But I have pursued another course: As the edition of 1762 had the benefit of the author's final emendations, it has, with the foregoing exception, been universally acknowledged as the received text; and as such I have adopted it, and have given, in foot-notes, those passages which he had either suppressed or altered.

I have hitherto only just had time to look hastily into the Comparative Atlas which you were good enough to send me at Christ's Hospital, but it seems to be a very useful book; and the plan of bringing the Ancient and Modern maps of great countries close together, is an important improvement.—Rev. G. Jacob, D.D., Head Master, Christ's Hospital, London.

As far as I have yet seen your Comparative Atlas, I should say that the publication will be extremely valuable as an assistance in the study of both ancient and modern geography.—Rev. William Dodson, D.D., Queen's College, Cheltenham.

The Comparative Atlas appears to be an acceptable addition to the resources of the learner and general reader, and a beautiful specimen of clear typography and Engraving.—Rev. J. R. Major, D.D., Head Master of Queen's College School, London.

I am exceedingly pleased with the execution of the work; and feel that the more I refer to it, the more I shall be convinced of its great utility and accuracy, and the more decided in strongly recommending it to my classes and friends.—*Rev. Mr. Tegg, possessing the plates of the above inimitable paintings, offers them at this extremely low price, being desirous that every School of Art, and every educational establishment in the kingdom, should possess a copy of these marvellous productions, which are, without doubt, the finest conceptions of the divine Raffaele. Painted in the zenith of his glory, in the last two years of his life, they possess all that the maturity of his talents could impart to them: and whether the greatness of the conception, the vigour of design, the style, or the expression, are subjects of consideration, all must acknowledge they are proofs of his continual progress. Indeed, it may be truly said these works are the climax, not only of Raffaele's productions, but of all those of modern genius in painting.

Last (The) Supper.
PAINTED BY LEONARDO DA VINCI, for the Dominican Convent of Santa Madonna della Grazia, at Milan. Engraved on Steel, in " pure line ," by F. Bacon. Framing size 24 by 17
India Proofs	0	12	0

Rubens has left on record his opinion of this chef d'œuvre of the most profound and versatile genius the world has ever seen, in these words:—"The best of the examples that Leonardo has left is 'The Last Supper,' in which he has represented the Apostles in places suited to them; but our Saviour is in the midst, being the most honourable, having no figure near enough to press on or incommode him. His attitude is grave, his arms are in a loose, free posture, to show the greater grandeur, while the Apostles appear in agitation, by their vehement desire to know which of them should betray him."

This sublime subject, the noblest that could occupy the profoundly speculative intellect and commanding genius of the painter, is said to have occupied Leonardo three years, and to have been completed in 1499. The time represented in the painting is that described in Matthew xxvi. 20—25.

MR. WILLIAM TEGG, trusting to the increased love of high Art, and in order to place a specimen of this engrossing subject within the reach of all who desire to possess a really fine Engraving, has secured the services of F. Bacon, who has been specially engaged on this work for two years, at a large outlay, with a view to produce a work of high character, and to direct the attention of connoisseurs and lovers of Art to the great beauty and finish obtainable in the pure line style of Engraving.

A guarantee will be given that only ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY PROOFS ON INDIA PAPER will be taken, and the most perfect faith will be kept, with a view to carry out this fine work of Art in the best manner possible.

. Formerly this Engraving would have been published at £2 2s. 0d.
