It is prefixed: (a) To verbs to express the contrary, and not the simple negative, of the action of the verb to which it is prefixed; as in unbend, undo. (b) To nouns to form verbs expressing privation of the thing or state expressed by the noun, or separation from it; as in unchild, unsex. Sometimes participles and participial adjectives formed with this prefix coincide in form with compounds of the negative prefix un- (see 2d UN-); as in undone (from undo), meaning unfastened, ruined; and undone (from 2d un- and done) meaning not finished. Un- is sometimes used with an intensive force merely; as in unloose.

Un- [AS. un-; akin to OS., OHG., & G. un-, L. in-, Gr. ἀν-, ἀ-.] An inseparable prefix, or particle, signifying not; in-; non-. Un- is prefixed mostly to words of Latin origin; un- is of wider application, and is attached to almost any adjective, or participle used adjectively, or adverb, from which it may be desired to form a corresponding negative adjective or adverb, and is also prefixed to nouns. 1. Un- is prefixed to adjectives, or to words used adjectively. Specifically: — (a) To adjectives, to denote the absence of the quality designated by the adjective (as, unallowable, uncongenial, ungrammatical, etc.). (b) To past participles, or to adjectives formed after the analogy of past participles, to indicate the absence of the condition expressed by them (as, unaccented, unbiased, undecided, ungloried, unspoken, unwarranted). (c) To present participles which come from intransitive verbs, or are themselves employed as adjectives, to mark the absence of the activity, disposition, or condition implied by the participle (as, unavailing, unpitying, unyielding). Words thus formed are not given in this vocabulary except when they have acquired an opposing or contrary, instead of a merely negative, meaning; or else an intensive sense more than a prefixed not would express; or have the value of independent words; or are used in a different sense from the usual meaning of the primitive; or are so familiarly used that they are hardly felt to be of negative origin. 2. Un- is prefixed to nouns to express the absence of, or the contrary of, that which the noun signifies; as, unbelief, untruth, etc.

CLASSIFICATION OF LANGUAGES.

Besides the Indo-European and Semitic families, philologists distinguish several others, which may be classed as follows:—

Tartaric (or Tataric) Family (called also Turanian, Scythian, Altaic, Ural-Altaic, and Mongolian), including the numerous and widely different languages of the Manchus, the Mongols, the Turks (in Asia and Europe), the Magyars (in Hungary), the Finns, the Laplanders, the Samoyeds, and a multitude of other tribes. Whether the Tamil and its sister idioms in Ceylon and southern India belong to this family is uncertain; they are grouped together under the name of the Dravidian Family. The Japanese, the Corean, and other tongues spoken in the peninsula and islands of the extreme north-eastern part of Asia are claimed by some as belonging to the Tartaric Family; but this is very doubtful.

South-eastern Asiatic or Monosyllabic Family in China, and Farther India, and countries adjacent to these (including the Chinese, Siamese, Burmese, Annamese, &c.).

Malay-Polynesian or Oceanic Family, including the languages and dialects spoken in nearly all the islands of the Pacific and Indian oceans; but the Australian in Australia and Tasmania, and the Papuan or Negrito in New Guinea, part of Borneo and some other islands, have not been shown to belong to this family.

Hamitic Family, composed of the Egyptian, and its congeners, the Coptic, Galla, Berber, Hottentot (?), etc.
South-African (sometimes called Zingian) Family, filling Africa about the equator and southward to the Cape of Good Hope.

American Family, occupying with its many and greatly varying dialects the whole continent of North and South America, if they all do belong to the same family.

Besides these great families, there are several isolated languages, or groups of languages, which have hitherto resisted all attempts at classification. Such are the Caucasian group (including the Georgian, Circassian, Leagbian, and Mitsjeghian idioms) in the mountain-range of the Caucasus; the Etruscan in Northern Italy; and the ancient Iberian, which was once the prevailing language of the Spanish peninsula, and which still lives on both sides of the Pyrenees in the strange language called Basque (Biscayan or Euscarr). The Albanian (or Skipetar) in north-western Greece probably belongs to the Indo-European family, representing a separate branch.

III. CHEMICAL.

Every elementary substance is represented, in chemical notation, by a symbol consisting of the initial or abbreviation of its Latin name; as H for hydrogen, O for oxygen, Ag (from Argentum) for silver, and the like, each symbol, when used singly, always indicating a single atom or equivalent of the substance represented by it. A compound body is represented by the symbols of the respective constituents written side by side, the number of atoms or equivalents of each, when more than one, being expressed by numbers written after the symbols, below the line; as, H₂O, a compound of two equivalents of hydrogen with one of oxygen, forming water.

In the case of secondary compounds, as a salt, the original compounds from which the secondary compounds are supposed to be derived are sometimes indicated by separating the symbols of the constituent compounds by commas or periods; as, CaO, CO₂, calcium carbonate.

A number written before the symbol of an element or of a compound designates a corresponding number of equivalents of that element or compound; as, 3SO₂, three equivalents of sulphuric acid.

IV. MATHEMATICAL.

RELATIONS OF QUANTITIES.

- + Plus; and; more; — indicating addition; as, $a + b = c$; — used also to indicate that figures have been omitted from the end of a number, or that the latter is approximately exact; as, the square root of 2 is 1.4142136 +.
- Minus; less; — indicating subtraction; as, $a - b = c$; — used also in a manner similar to + to indicate approximate exactness.
- ±, or ∓ Plus or minus; ambiguous; indicating that the number or quantity following it may have either of the signs + or —; as, $a ± b$.
- × Multiplied by; times; into; as, $a × b = ab$; $6 × 4 = 24$.

Multiplication is also often indicated by placing a dot between the factors (as, 4.5.6. = 120), or by writing the factors, when not numeral, one after another without any sign.

÷, or : Divided by; as, $a ÷ b$; that is, a divided by b ; $6 ÷ 3 = 2$.

Division is also very often indicated by writing the divisor under the dividend, with a line between them; as, $\frac{a}{b}$; that is, a divided by b ; $\frac{6}{3} = 2$.

= Is equal to; equals; as, $(a + b) × c = ac + bc$; $6 + 2 = 8$.

> Is greater than; as, $a > b$: that is, a is greater than b ; $6 > 5$.

< Is less than; as, $a < b$: that is, a is less than b ; $3 < 4$.

○ Denoting equivalence in area or volume (in geometry).

~ The difference between; — denoting a difference between two quantities without designating the greater one; as, $a \sim b$.

∝ Varies as; is proportional to; as, $a ∝ b$.

: Is to; the ratio of; } — indicating
 :: As; equals; } geometrical proportion; as, $a : b :: c : d$; that is,
 a is to b as c is to d .
 ∴ Hence; therefore; on this account.
 ∵ Because.

∞ Indefinitely great; infinite; infinity.

0 Indefinitely small; infinitesimal; also, as a numeral, naught; zero.

∠ Angle; the angle; as, ∠ ABC.

⊥ Right angle; as, ⊥ ABC; that is, the right angle, ABC.

⊥ The perpendicular; perpendicular to; as, draw AB ⊥ CD.

∥ Parallel; parallel to; is parallel to; as, AB ∥ CD.

○ Circle; circumference; 360°.

⊙ Arc of a circle; arc.

△ Triangle; as, △ ABC; that is, the triangle ABC.

□ Square; as, □ ABCD; that is, the square ABCD.

▭ Rectangle; as, ▭ ABCD; that is, the rectangle ABCD.

√, or √ Root; — indicating, when used without a figure placed above it, the square root; as, $\sqrt{4} = 2$; $\sqrt{4a^2} = 2a$. This symbol is called the radical sign. To denote any other than the square root, a figure (the index), expressing the degree of the required root, is placed above the sign; as $\sqrt[2]{a}$, $\sqrt[3]{a}$, $\sqrt[n]{a}$, &c.

∝ The root of a quantity is also denoted by a fractional index at the right hand side of the quantity and above it, the denominator of the index expressing the degree of the root; as, $a^{\frac{1}{2}}$, $a^{\frac{2}{3}}$, &c.; that is, the square, cube, and fifth roots of a , respectively.

Vinculum, indicate that { Parentheses, the quantities
 { Brackets, to which they { Braces, are applied, or { Bar, which are in-
 are to be taken altogether; as,
 $x + y^2$; $2(a + b)$; $a \times (b + c + d)$;
 $\frac{x}{y}$ | z .

f , or F Function; function of; as,
 $y = f(x)$; that is, y is, or equals,
 a function of x .

∫ Other letters or signs are frequently used to indicate functions; as, f , ϕ , ψ , χ , π , and the like.

d Differential; as, dx ; that is, the differential of x .

δ Variation; as δx ; that is, the variation of x .

Δ Finite difference.

D Differential coefficient; derivative.

∂ The letters d , δ , Δ , D , and sometimes others, are variously employed by different mathematicians, prefixed to quantities, to denote that the differentials, variations, finite differences, or differential coefficients of these quantities are to be taken; but the ordinary significations are those given above.

∫ Integral; integral of; — indicating that the expression before which it is placed is to be integrated; as, $\int 2x dx = x^2$; that is, the integral of $2x dx$ is x^2 .

∫ If integration is to be performed more than once, the sign is repeated once for each time; for a number of times greater than three, an index is commonly written at the right hand above; as, $\int^m x dx^m$; that is, the m th integral, or the result of m integrations, of $x dx^m$.

\int_a^b denotes that the integral is to be taken between the value b of the variable and its value a . \int_a^b denotes that the integral ends at the value a of the variable, and \int^b that it begins at the value b . These forms must not be confounded with the similar one indicating repeated integration, or with that indicating the integral with respect to a particular variable.

Σ Sum; algebraic sum; — commonly used to indicate the sum or summation of finite differences, and nearly like the symbol f .

M The modulus of any system of logarithms.

e Residual.

g The acceleration of gravity, or (for ordinary practical purposes) 32.2 feet per second.

π The number 3.14159265 +; the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter, of a semicircle to its radius, and of the area of a circle to the square of its radius. In a circle whose radius is unity, it is equal to the semi-circumference, and hence is used to designate an arc of 180°.

° Degrees; as, 60° sixty degrees.

' Minutes; as, 30', thirty minutes.

" Seconds; as, 20", twenty seconds.

' , ' , ' , &c. Accents used to mark quantities of the same kind which are to be distinguished; as, a' , a'' , a''' , &c., which are usually read a prime, a second, a third, etc.; $a^b c'' + a' b' c + a'' b' c'$.

$1, 2, 3, &c.$ Indices placed above and at the right hand of quantities to denote that they are raised to powers whose degree is indicated by the figure; as, a^1 ; that is, the first power of a ; a^2 , the square or second power of a ; and the like.

SPECIMEN OF A CORRECTED PROOF-SHEET.

THE CROWNING OF PETRARCH.

□ a. caps. Nothing can be conceived more affecting or noble than that ceremony. The superb palaces and ³and ²porticos ¹had which rolled the ivory chariots of Marius and Caesar had long mouldered into dust. The laureled faces, the golden eagles, the shouting Legions, the captives, and the pictured cities were indeed want[ing to his victorious procession. The sceptre had passed away from Rome. But she still retained the mightier influence of an (empire / intellectual), and was now to confer the reward of an intellectual triumph. To the man who had extended the dominion of her ancient language — who had erected the temples of philosophy and imagination in the haunts of ignorance and hercidity, whose visions were the arts of admiring nations, enchained by the influence of his song — whose spoils were the treasures of ancient genius — the Eternal City offered the (glorious and just) tribute of her gratitude.
 [Amid the ruined monuments of ancient, and the infant erections of modern art, he who had restored the broken link between the two ages of human civilisation was crowned with the wreath which he had deserved from the moderns who owed to him their refinement, — from the ancients who owe to him their fame.
